

"The law is progressive and expansive, adapting itself to the new relations and interests which are constantly springing up in the progress of society. But this progress must be by analogy to what is already settled."

EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been twofold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefor a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined product of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

VOLUME THIRTY-THREE

EXCHANGE.

As a Noun

A word of precise import, meaning the giving of one thing for another, requiring the transfers to be in kind, and excluding transactions into which money enters, either as the consideration or as a basis of measure;¹ also the act of giving or taking one thing for another which is regarded as an equivalent.² It has several dictionary definitions, depending on the character of the transaction to which it is applied.³ While the word ordinarily implies the giving of one thing for another, which ordinarily is regarded as an equivalent, it may include, under particular circumstances, a number of transactions in which money is used as the medium of exchange,⁴ and it has been said that, in law, an exchange is two sales.⁵

The term is almost synonymous with "barter" see

9 C.J.S. p 1551 note 65, also Exchange of Property § 1, "excambion" and "excambium," see 32 C.J.S. p 1148 notes 30-32, "redemption," "swap" and "trade;" and has been distinguished from "compromise," "lease," "loan," and "sale" see Exchange of Property § 1.

As an association for, or the place of, transacting business especially by brokers see the C.J.S. title Exchanges § 1, also 23 C.J. p 243 note 1-p 245 note 24; and as the contract of commutation or mutual transfer of property real or personal see Exchange of Property § 1. In commercial law, as the amount paid for the collection of commercial paper coming from a distant point, or the negotiation for the transmission of money from place to place see Bills and Notes § 8 text and notes 52-56.

Phrases employing the word are listed in the note.⁶

§ 1. Definitions, Nature, and Distinctions

- a. Definitions and nature generally
- b. Other terms compared and distinguished

a. Definitions and Nature Generally

An exchange of property is a mutual transfer of property for property other than money. At common law a technical exchange of land is a mutual grant of equal interests, not necessarily in value but in dignity, as a fee for a fee, or a lease for a certain term for a lease for the same term, the one in consideration for the other.

An exchange of property is a mutual transfer of one or more pieces of property for property other than money.¹ Where a transfer of property takes place without the transferor's receiving anything in return the transaction is not an exchange.² An exchange of goods is a commutation or transfer of goods for goods.³

An exchange of land at common law is a mutual grant of equal interests, not necessarily in value

but in dignity, as a fee for a fee, or a lease for a certain term for a lease for the same term, the one in consideration for the other,⁴ but the technical exchanges of land, as known to the common law, are now of rare occurrence, and the term is generally used in a broader sense.⁵

b. Other Terms Compared and Distinguished

The word exchange is generally regarded as synonymous with barter, swap, or trade and it is distinguishable from compromise, lease, or loan. It has frequently been stated that there is no substantial difference between a sale and an exchange. Technically speaking, the words exchange or barter and sale express logically different transactions. As a general but not absolute rule, where the consideration for a transfer of property is expressed or valued in money terms and treated as a specified amount of money the transaction is a sale, but where the consideration is other property not measured in money terms the transaction is an exchange.

The word "exchange" is generally regarded as synonymous with "barter,"⁶ "swap"⁷ or "trade,"⁸ in the sense that each is a reciprocal transfer of property for property. A compromise,⁹ a lease,¹⁰ or a

Agreement establishing boundary line

Where the true dividing line between two tracts of land is in doubt and there is dispute between the adjoining owners as to the exact location of the line, which depends on variable circumstances not susceptible of certain determination, a parol agreement between adjoining owners establishing a line as the true dividing line is not an "exchange of lands."—*Howard v. 10. Tex.—Singleton v. Houston, 70 S.W. 98, 35 Tex.Civ.App. 10.

Exchange of lands for term of years

A contract provided first for the use and possession by each party of lands of the other for a term of years from the date thereof, and it was held that a subsequent proviloan,¹¹ is distinguishable from an exchange. The most natural signification of the word "redemption" does not imply exchange, although it may include that meaning.¹² Bailment as distinguished from exchange is considered in the title Bailments § 2.

Sale compared and distinguished. It has frequently been held or stated that there is no substantial difference between a sale and an exchange;¹³ and the legal effect of a contract of exchange is generally the same as that of a contract of sale.¹⁴ In both cases the title is absolutely transferred¹⁵ and both transactions are governed by the same rules of law practically.¹⁶ In law an exchange is recognized as two sales¹⁷ or a double sale,¹⁸ and an exchange of real estate is as to each one of the parties a sale and purchase of property.¹⁹ The term "sale" may be construed as including an exchange,²⁰ particularly under statutes so providing,²¹ and indeed exchanges are frequently denominated

"sales."²² When used together the words "sale or exchange" comprehend a transmutation of property from one person to another in consideration of some price or recompense in value.²³

However, technically speaking the words "exchange" and "sale" express logically different transactions.²⁴ It has been stated broadly either specifically or substantially, that where there is a transfer of property for property other than money the transaction is an exchange, and that where the transfer is for money the transaction is a sale,²⁵ and this is the meaning usually ascribed when a question of power or authority to sell is involved.²⁶ The term sale is not synonymous with barter but on the contrary has a materially different meaning,²⁷ and if the consideration for the transfer of the property is other goods, no price being fixed in money, the transaction is an exchange or barter rather than a sale.²⁸ The fact that payment may sion, requiring the payment of lease money at the end of each year by one or the other, according as there was an excess of land in his favor, must be held to have grown out of the fact that the exact number of acres each was supplying was uncertain when the contract was executed, and did not refer, as was contended, to a probable loss of control of the lands conveyed, and hence the contract must be regarded as an agreement for an exchange of lands for a term of years, and not a lease by the one to the other. —Singleton v. Houston, supra.

The word "barter" means to traffic or trade by exchanging one commodity for another, as distinguished from selling one commodity and purchasing another through the use of money or some other medium of exchange.—Stone v. Rogers, 189 So. 810, 186 Miss. 53.

be made in something other than money is not a controlling factor in determining whether a contract is one of sale or of barter or exchange,²⁹ and it has been generally held, where the question has arisen, that any transaction whereby property is parted with for a valuable consideration, whether there be a money payment or not, provided the bargain is made and the value measured in money terms, and paid or agreed to be paid in something which the parties agree to treat as a specified amount of money, is a sale, but that where property is transferred for property, no price being set on either piece, the transaction is an exchange;³⁰ and this distinction has been recognized in the case of a transfer of personal property for other personal property,³¹ of real property for other real property,³² or of real property for personal property.³³

Whether there has been a sale or an exchange of property cannot be conclusively determined by the fact that there was a fixed price at which the exchange was to be made, although it is a fairly safe criterion, but it depends on the intent at the time and must be determined from the peculiar circumstances of the particular transaction,³⁴ and so it has been held that the mere fact that a price is placed on the properties involved in an exchange of lands does not render the transaction a sale where the price fixed is evidently for the purpose of constituting a basis on which the exchange may be made, and not for the purpose of fixing definitely the value of the respective properties;³⁵ and a like rule may be applied in the case of an exchange of personal property for other personal property³⁶ and, it seems, in the case of an exchange of real property for personal property.³⁷

The idea of a consideration of money or its equivalent,³⁸ or an agreed price,³⁹ is a necessary element of a sale as opposed to barter or exchange. It has

Test

The test for determining whether there has been a sale or an exchange of real property is whether there was a fixed price at which the exchange was to be made, it being a sale if there was a fixed price and an exchange if there was not.—Hawn v. Malone, 176 N.W. 393, 188 Iowa 439.

also been held that the mere fact that one of the parties is to pay a sum of money in addition to the property to be transferred by him, or that provision is made for an adjustment of the difference in the values of the respective properties, does not necessarily prevent the transaction from being a contract for the exchange of lands;⁴⁰ and a like rule has been applied in the case of an exchange of personal property;⁴¹ conversely, the fact that property in addition to a sum of money is paid for a piece of property does not prevent the transaction from being a sale rather than an exchange.⁴²

The use of the words "sold" and "payment" does not necessarily prevent the transaction from being an exchange,⁴³ but the use of the word "sold" has been regarded as an indication of the fact that the parties intended a sale and not an exchange,⁴⁴ and where an agreement expressly designates a transaction as a sale of property with the acceptance of a transfer of other lands in part payment, it has been held that it cannot be considered on the basis of an exchange of properties.⁴⁵

If the requisites of a technical common-law exchange are not present the fact that part or all of the consideration for a transfer of land is a conveyance of other land does not in and of itself amount to a technical exchange rather than a sale,⁴⁶ and a transaction is a sale rather than a technical or common-law exchange where land is conveyed in consideration of personal property or a chose in action,⁴⁷ or where there is a payment of money in addition to the property exchanged.⁴⁸

§ 2. What Law Governs

Questions in regard to the title or transfer of land involved in an exchange are controlled by the laws of the state in which the land is situated, but the right of a party in possession of land under a contract for its conveyance to avoid in equity such contract on the ground that the other party did not have title is governed by the law of the forum.

Questions in regard to the title⁴⁹ or transfer⁵⁰ of land involved in an exchange and all similar questions are controlled by the laws of the state in which the land is situated; but the right of a party in possession of land under a contract for its conveyance to avoid in equity such contract on the ground that the other party did not have title is governed by the law of the forum.⁵¹ An unevicted party to an exchange of lands may maintain an action to recover damages for fraudulent representations as to title, based on a failure of title to part of the land included in the conveyance to him, notwithstanding the rule of the state where the land lies that there can be no action on a covenant of warranty until after eviction.⁵²

§ 3. Requisites and Validity

- a. Parties
- b. Agreement or mutual assent
- c. Consideration
- d. Subject matter
- e. Legality
- f. Formal requisites of contract or conveyance

a. Parties

The intention of a person may be considered in determining whether he has become a party to a contract for the exchange of property. A contract will not be invalidated for lack of mental capacity of one of the parties if he fully comprehends the matters involved and the nature and consequences of his act.

The intention of a person may be considered in determining whether such person has become a party to a contract for the exchange of property.⁵³ A person who was not originally a party to a conditional agreement for the exchange of real property not under seal, which is subject to ascertainment of future contingent facts dependent on future negotiations before it becomes binding on either party, may subsequently become a party to such agreement.⁵⁴ A party may contract for the exchange of real property in the name of another.⁵⁵

other personalty cannot be held liable on the contract where he is not a party to it.⁵⁶ A broker is not a party to a contract for the exchange of property by which one of the parties agrees to pay him a commission, where he is not named as a party therein, and it is not executed by or delivered to him, and his name appears thereon only as a witness to its execution.⁵⁷ The wife of one of the parties who signs a contract in which she is not named as a party merely to release her distributive share is not personally liable on the contract.⁵⁸ That a contract was not signed by the wife of one of the parties is immaterial where she signs the deed called for by the contract.⁵⁹

A contract for the exchange of personalty executed by two parties may be binding on them notwithstanding a third person is named in the body of the contract, as a party thereto, where there is nothing to show that the contract was not to become binding until signed by such third person.⁶⁰ An exchange contract which requires the signature of joint owners to be effective is not binding on one of the joint owners if the other refuses to sign,⁶¹ but the mere fact that a person is not the sole owner of the property he proposes to exchange does not relieve him from liability for failing to perform,⁶² unless he conditions his offer to that effect.⁶³ So, the mere fact that a party cannot perform it without the signature of his wife to the deed does not render the contract void as between the parties to it.⁶⁴

not be invalidated for lack of mental capacity of one of the parties where the party fully comprehends the matters involved and the nature and consequences of his act.⁶⁵ The mere fact that a grantor knows that he is making a deed does not show sufficient mental capacity to sustain an exchange of properties, but he must have sufficient mental strength to protect his interests and fully comprehend the transaction.⁶⁶ A contract for an exchange which is entered into while one party knows that the other is intoxicated is voidable at the latter's election.⁶⁷

b. Agreement or Mutual Assent

Agreement or mutual assent is essential in a contract for the exchange of property. A mere offer to exchange can be revoked at any time before acceptance. A conditional acceptance operates as a rejection of the offer, but it may be accepted by the original offerer as a counter offer.

A contract for the exchange of property does not arise where there is no agreement or assent of the parties.⁶⁸ In accordance with the general rules pertaining to contracts, an offer for the exchange of property which is accepted before revocation results in a binding contract,⁶⁹ and after acceptance the offer cannot be withdrawn,⁷⁰ nor can one of the parties change the terms of the contract.⁷¹ The offer must be accepted by the person to whom it is made,⁷² or by his authorized agent,⁷³ and the mere execution of identical offers by each party does not constitute a contract.⁷⁴ One offering or proposing exchange of properties need not have actual personal notice of acceptance to bind him,⁷⁵ of the purchase price paid by him at the time when he signed the contract, since it was not intended by the parties that the contract should become a valid contract until signed by the wife.—Rothstein v. Weeks, 195 N.W. 49, 224 Mich. 548.

and notice of acceptance to the offerer's authorized agent,⁷⁶ or the transmission of the message of acceptance in the manner specified⁷⁷ is sufficient. An offer sent by mail may be accepted by telegram where the offerer does not specify the means of communication.⁷⁸ A mere offer to exchange property, in the absence of consideration not to revoke, can be revoked at any time before it is accepted,⁷⁹ and an acceptance after revocation is ineffective.⁸⁰ It is sufficient if the notice of the revocation is communicated to the agent of the other party who has authority to receive such notice,⁸¹ but a notice of revocation to the offerer's agent does not effect a revocation.⁸² Where no time is stated an offer may be accepted within a reasonable time.⁸³

An offer to exchange property is not completed on mailing but only on receipt by the offeree, so that the time for acceptance runs from the time of receipt.⁸⁴ An offer will lapse as the result of the death of the offerer.⁸⁵

Conditional acceptance or counter offer. A conditional acceptance operates as a rejection of the offer,⁸⁶ and an attempted acceptance of the original offer after a counter offer has been made and rejected does not result in a contract and has no legal effect,⁸⁷ although within the time originally limited for acceptance.⁸⁸ A purported acceptance subject to ability to deliver clear title has been held to create a condition not contemplated in the offer, and not to constitute an acceptance,⁸⁹ but it has also been held that an addition of the words "free from incumbrance" does not create a counter offer and render the communication ineffective as an acceptance.⁹⁰ After acceptance by the offeree, other propositions by him cannot be considered as counter offers in the original transaction.⁹¹ The original offerer's acceptance of a counter offer results in a binding contract.⁹²

c. Consideration

- (1) In general
- (2) Failure of consideration

(1) In General

A promise to exchange by one party is the consideration for a similar promise by the other and the contract needs no independent or separate consideration. Mutuality is an essential element of the contract but the value of the respective properties need not be equal.

The exchange of one article for another imports a consideration.⁹³ In the case of an executory contract, the agreement of one party to exchange property is the consideration for the similar agreement of the other party,⁹⁴ and the contract needs no independent or separate consideration.⁹⁵ The transfer by one party of his property constitutes a consideration for the transfer by the transferee of his property to the other party.⁹⁶ Covenants and promises accompanying an exchange form a part of the consideration,⁹⁷ such as an agreement to assume a mortgage.⁹⁸ A conveyance of land may constitute the consideration for the conveyance of other land by the grantee named in the first mentioned conveyance, notwithstanding the grantor in such conveyance prior to the agreement for exchange accepted a lease of the land conveyed by him from the other party to the exchange where there was a dispute in good faith as to the ownership of such land.⁹⁹

Mutuality is an essential element of an executory contract for the exchange of property.¹ The mere fact that an agreement involving an exchange does not contain an express provision to buy does not necessarily affect the binding force of the agreement.² An alleged lack of mutuality may be waived.³

Adequacy. The values of the respective properties need not be equal and mere inequality or inadequacy of consideration where no fraud or misrepresentation is shown is not ground for invalidation of the contract.⁴ In determining adequacy of consideration the values placed on the properties to be exchanged are regarded with some degree of liberality.⁵ The mere fact that there is a difference in the number of acres in the parcels of land involved in an exchange does not invalidate the transaction.⁶ A promise by one party to convey property held by him under an oral contract of purchase under which he has partially performed has been held sufficient to support an executory agreement for the exchange of real property.⁷ Although one or more of several considerations which are recited are insufficient, if others are good and sufficient, the validity of the exchange will be upheld.⁸

(2) Failure of Consideration

Where title to either property fails or no title or dominion passes, there is a failure of consideration. On the mere failure of consideration, a conveyance does not ipso facto become void and the transferor does not thereby become reinvested with his original title.

Where the title to either property fails, there is a failure of consideration.⁹ There also is a failure of consideration where a deed is delivered but no title passes notwithstanding the covenants in the deed;¹⁰ where a party fails to discharge a mortgage on the property to be conveyed by him pursuant to his agreement;¹¹ and where one party appropriates for his own use the property which the other party is to receive.¹² The fact that there are encumbrances on land received in exchange, of which the person receiving the land has no knowledge, does not invalidate the contract where such person is not affected in any manner and the defects in title are remedied as soon as the other party learns of them.¹³ There is total want of consideration where personal property for which real property and other personalty is to be exchanged is not in existence.¹⁴ On the mere failure of consideration a conveyance does not ipso facto become void and the transferor does not thereby become reinvested with his original title;¹⁵ but the failure of consideration gives the right to a rescission and recovery of the property conveyed, as stated infra § 10. The burden of establishing that there was no consideration is on the person who asserts a lack of consideration.¹⁶ In determining whether there was a failure of consideration, the court must ignore the trade or inflated value and determine the matters at issue on the basis of the real value.¹⁷

Nonpayment of note given in exchange. It has been held that a note of a third person, given in exchange for other property, is itself the consideration moving from the party giving it in exchange, and if it is not paid such party will not be

The mere fact that at the time of an executory contract a party thereto does not have legal title does not invalidate the contract, but it has been held that a party is not required to accept title if the other party at the time of the contract concealed the fact that he had no title or bona fide claim of ownership.

It has been held that, where neither party to an attempted exchange of realty has a transferable title, the exchange is void;¹⁹ but the mere fact that at the time an executory contract for the exchange is made a party thereto does not have legal title does not invalidate the contract,²⁰ especially where such party has equitable title to the real property in question.²¹ Where the contract contemplates that one party shall secure title from a third person, and such title is secured within the time limited in the contract, he cannot refuse to perform if the other party is willing to accept a conveyance,²² but it has been held that a party is not required to accept a title to land to which at the time of the contract the other party had no title,²³ nor bona fide claim of ownership,²⁴ where such party has concealed the facts. The mere fact that title to personal property involved in a contract for the exchange of property is in a third person does not invalidate the contract.²⁵ A person who holds under a contract of conditional sale has such an interest as will permit him to exchange the property for other personal property.²⁶

The legality of a contract of exchange is controlled by rules governing the legality of contracts generally.

General rules apply in determining the legality of contracts of exchange. The mere fact that certain personal property of a third person is in the hands of public authorities after a seizure does not render a contract involving the exchange of such property illegal where there is no attempt to evade the statute under which the seizure is made, and no attempt to interfere with the enforcement of such statute.²⁷ An agreement by a party to a contract who has given certain corporate stock as part of the consideration for certain property received by him to repurchase the stock on or before a certain day is not void as a gambling contract.²⁸ The burden of establishing that a contract for the exchange of lands is against public policy is on the person making such claim.²⁹

f. Formal Requisites of Contract or Conveyance

- (1) Contract
- (2) Exchange conveyance

(1) Contract

The contract should be reasonably definite and certain. It should contain the time for passing title and making payment and a description of the land sufficient to identify it. The general rules governing execution and delivery apply.

The terms of the contract should be reasonably definite and certain.³⁰ The times for passing title and making payment are essential terms of an exchange contract,³¹ and where no time is fixed for payment of the balance of the amount due the contract is void for indefiniteness.³² The terms of a written contract for the exchange of real property should impose on each party the obligation of conveying the land owned by him.³³ A contract for an exchange of lands as within the statute of frauds is considered in the C.J.S. title Frauds, Statute of § 92, also 27 C.J. p 205 note 16—p 206 note 29.

Description of property. The contract must so describe the property involved that it can be identified with reasonable certainty;³⁴ but no fixed set

Failure to state city, county, or state
A contract which describes the land merely by lot number and does not show in what city, county, or state the lots are situated, or which otherwise does not furnish the means by which the description can of terms and no particular form of words are necessary to describe the real estate involved.³⁵ The description is sufficient where from the words used the description can be made certain,³⁶ as where a surveyor with or without the aid of extrinsic evidence can locate the land and establish the boundaries.³⁷ A writing is sufficient which affords the means by which the identification of the land involved may be made perfect and certain by extrinsic or parol evidence,³⁸ showing the application of the description to particular property to the exclusion of all other property.³⁹ It is sufficient to describe the land involved by reference to ownership,⁴⁰ or to location at a specified street number in a certain city,⁴¹ in a specified town, county, and state,⁴² or in a certain street between certain avenues,⁴³ where such description is sufficient to identify the land; but the only purpose for which parol evidence can be heard is to apply the description of the land given in the contract to the subject matter.⁴⁴ The mere fact that a part of a contract is indefinite and uncertain does not prevent the contract from being held valid as to part of the land which is properly and sufficiently described.⁴⁵ An agreement providing that all the personal property on certain premises shall pass except certain pieces to be agreed on is sufficient.⁴⁶ Where an agreement does not sufficiently describe the property, the defect is not cured or the agreement ratified by deeds executed by both parties accurately describing certain lands and left by them with their respective attorneys.⁴⁷ A statute prohibiting a sale of realty by reference to a map unless the map has been recorded has been held to apply to a contract of exchange.⁴⁸

Execution, delivery, and acknowledgment. The general rules governing execution and delivery apply to contracts for exchange of property. Thus, a writing signed by an agent in the course of negotiations for the exchange of his principal's real property for real property of another is not binding on the principal where it appears that such writing was merely a memorandum made by the agent for his own convenience and to show what had occurred at a meeting between his principal and such other.⁴⁹ A contract, which although executed by one of the parties is never delivered to the other, is not enforceable.⁵⁰ A contract for the exchange of lands which is signed by both parties may become operative and be binding on them as a contract, although it is retained by only one of them or is delivered to a third person.⁵¹ A contract for the exchange of real property, which is delivered to a third person with the understanding that it is not to be delivered to the other party, and is not to become binding under certain conditions, does not become binding where such conditions are shown to exist.⁵² Where a contract is placed in the hands of a third person for delivery on the happening of a certain contingency with the understanding that it is not to be binding until delivery, delivery contrary to such arrangement is not binding on the parties.⁵³ There is a sufficient delivery of a contract for the exchange of real property for personal property where the adverse party refuses to receive it merely because it is not acknowledged.⁵⁴ A party to a contract of exchange may waive the delivery prior to a certain date of the contract signed by the other party.⁵⁵ It has been held that acknowledgment is not essential to the validity of a contract for the ex-be made definite or certain is void.—Whitehead v. Reiger, Tex.Com. App., 6 S.W.2d 745, affirming, Civ. App., 282 S.W. 651.

(2) Exchange Conveyance

For a technical exchange of lands the word exchange must be used, and there must be a provision for reentry on ouster or eviction. Conveyance may be by deeds exchanged between the parties or by one deed.

Exchange of lands is a technical form of conveyance in which the word "exchange" must be used, and no circumlocution can operate to supply this word if it is omitted.⁵⁷ To constitute a technical common-law exchange, there must be a provision for reentry on ouster or eviction.⁵⁸ It seems that the conveyance may be by deeds exchanged between the parties, although only one deed is required.⁵⁹ Technical exchanges of land have been almost entirely abandoned in modern conveyancing, the substitute being mutual deeds of bargain and sale.⁶⁰

- (4) Knowledge and intention
- (5) Materiality
- (6) Reliance on representations
- (7) Fraud of third persons

(1) In General

A false representation as to a material fact which is made with knowledge of its falsity or without knowing whether it is true or false, which may properly be relied on by the party to whom it is made, which is made with the intention that it shall be relied on, and which is acted on by such other to his injury, constitutes fraud which will entitle the party deceived to relief. The mere fact that one party drives an unconscionable bargain does not constitute actionable fraud.

False representations after inducing intoxication

Where defendants induced plaintiffs to drink to excess and then by means of false representations to consent to an exchange of lands whereby plaintiff was defrauded, defendants were guilty of actionable fraud. —Godwin v. De Motte, 116 N.E. 17, 64 Ind.App. 394.

Statement to agent concerning route

No representation by one party to an exchange of land that a pike road extended by the farm to be exchanged by him was made by his statement to the agent, with whom both parties were going along a pike road by automobile to see the farm, when several miles from the farm, that "We will turn off here; we could go to the place on this road, but there are some bridges out."—Williams v. Craig, Tex.Civ.App., 252 S.W. 876.

Exchange of property for school lot

(1) Where defendants desired a lot on which there was a school, and they knew that the school board was contemplating moving the school to another locality, it was not a badge of fraud to buy a larger lot in that locality, and offer to exchange it for the schoolhouse lot.—School Board of Sand Lick Dist. v. Smith, 113 S.E. 868, 134 Va. 98.

ceived by them;⁶⁶ but the mere fact that a party is deceived is not a basis for a charge of fraud where the other party is in no way responsible for the deception.⁶⁷

(2) Concealment or Suppression of Facts

Concealment of material facts by a party is fraudulent where the concealment is active or where there is a duty to disclose the facts.

As a general rule where persons are dealing with each other on equal terms, and no confidential relation exists between them, neither is bound to disclose superior information, which he may have, affecting the exchange,⁶⁸ particularly where the means of knowledge are at the other party's disposal;⁶⁹ but concealment of material facts by a party is fraudulent where the concealment is active,⁷⁰ or where there is a duty to disclose the facts.⁷¹ If a defect is not patently observable to the adversary party in the exercise of ordinary care, a positive duty to disclose such fact arises and failure to do so is actionable.⁷²

(3) Statement of Fact, Opinion, or Intention

Fraud consists of false representations of existing facts as distinguished from opinions, promises, or assumed future facts.

Material false representations as to existing conditions made with intent to deceive are fraudulent.⁷³ In order to constitute fraud, false representations must, as a rule, be of facts which exist at the time the representations are made or have existed, in distinction from an opinion, a promise, or an assumed future fact.⁷⁴ The facts must be

A mere expression of opinion does not constitute a fraudulent misrepresentation,⁷⁶ but even an opinion may be a misrepresentation, and if a party gives it as an existing fact on a matter material to the transaction it then becomes a statement of fact, which if relied and acted on as a fact may constitute a fraudulent representation.⁷⁷ The rules with regard to "dealer's talk," "puffing," or "trade talk" apply in exchanges of property;⁷⁸ but the doctrine that proof of mere "trade talk" or "puffing," such as is common to the trader of property, is not sufficient to sustain a charge of fraud, has no application to false representations of material facts which are in their nature calculated to deceive and are made with intent to deceive.⁷⁹ A mere promise or representation by a party as to what may happen in the future will not constitute a fraudulent misrepresentation,⁸⁰ but it has been held that a party who induces an exchange by false representations, although promissory in nature, at the time not intending to perform them, and not intending that the representation shall be made good, is chargeable with fraud,⁸¹ although there is some authority to the contrary.⁸²

(4) Knowledge and Intention

As a general rule, a party must have knowledge that his representations are false to constitute fraud, but fraud may also be predicated on representations which a party makes as true of his own knowledge, although he has no knowledge of their truth or falsity.

As a general rule, to constitute actual fraud in making misrepresentations, the party making them must have knowledge of their falsity.⁸³ However, fraud may be predicated on representations which a party makes without knowledge of their falsity where he at least impliedly represents that they are true of his own knowledge, and he knows or has reason to believe that the other party relies on them.⁸⁴ So, a positive statement as to a material fact made without knowledge of the true facts,⁸⁵ or a statement recklessly made without such knowledge,⁸⁶ or a false representation to the effect that the person making it has information on which he bases his representation⁸⁷ may constitute fraud. A false representation founded on a mistake resulting from gross negligence will be considered fraudulent in equity.⁸⁸

Statements on information. A person who makes no positive statement, represents that he has no personal knowledge of certain facts bearing on an exchange, and asserts them on information received from third persons, is not chargeable with fraud,⁸⁹ but an untrue material representation stated on information warrants rescission in equity where the party making it affirms the truthfulness of the information.⁹⁰

(5) Materiality

In order that a false representation may be fraudulent it must relate to a material matter.

In order that a false representation may be fraudulent it must relate to a material matter which induces the party deceived to enter into the contract of exchange,⁹¹ but where such a representation is made, it is ground for relief where the other elements of fraud are present.⁹²

(6) Reliance on Representations

- (a) In general
- (b) Examination or investigation by injured party
- (c) Means of knowledge
- (d) Representations as to matters of record

(a) In General

In order that a false representation may constitute actionable fraud, it is necessary that the complaining party should have relied on it and that he had a right to do so.

In order that a false representation may constitute a fraud which will entitle the complaining party to relief, it is necessary that he should have relied on it,⁹³ and also that he had a right to rely on it.⁹⁴

Express statutory provisions

When so provided by statute, the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, although he believes it to be true, constitutes actual fraud.—Hewitt v. Klages, 268 P. 694, 92 Cal. App. 596.

Repeating misrepresentations

The fact that defendant, in an exchange of land, merely repeated misrepresentations which others had made to him did not relieve him from liability, if the statements so repeated amounted to such a representation of the character of the land that plaintiff was induced to make the exchange.—Barbian v. Grant, Tex.Civ.App., 190 S.W. 789.

Padlock notice on premises

Suspicion as affecting right to rely

That a party to an exchange of land was suspicious, that something was wrong did not deprive her of the right to rely on the misrepresentations of the other party concerning his land made to induce her to enter into the trade.—Perkins v. Orfield, 176 N.W. 157, 145 Minn. 68.

The mere existence of other causes which might have induced a party to enter into a contract will not relieve a party making false representations from his fraud, provided such representations form some of the inducements without which the transaction would not have been consummated.⁹⁵ A representation connected with a proposition for the exchange of land may be fraudulent, notwithstanding the fact that subsequently a second proposition is made from which a contract ultimately arises.⁹⁶ False representations, knowingly made by a party previous to the exchange as to the character, condition, and value of property involved are presumed to have influenced the mind of the other party, even though he had full opportunity to observe and know the actual truth,⁹⁷ and the burden is on the former to prove clearly that such false representations did not influence the opposite party in making the exchange.⁹⁸

(b) Examination or Investigation by Injured Party

As a general rule, a party who makes an independent investigation as to, or an inspection of, the property and relies on his own judgment cannot avoid the contract on the grounds of false representations, but the mere fact that a person inquires about or examines the property does not conclusively show that he did not rely on the misrepresentations.

A party who relies on his own judgment cannot claim that a fraud was practiced on him.⁹⁹ As a general rule, a party who makes an independent investigation as to, or an inspection of, the real¹ or personal² property to be received by him, and does not rely on the representations of the other party, cannot avoid the contract on the ground that such representations were false and fraudulent; but it has been held that the mere fact that a person to whom false representations have been made makes inquiry as to,³ or an examination of,⁴ the property to be received by him does not conclusively show that he did not rely on such representations, particularly where he is not familiar with the nature of the property.⁵ A party to the contract cannot escape responsibility for his false statements where the conditions and circumstances are such as to render it practically impossible for the other party to obtain the necessary information by his examination,⁶ or where the guilty party prevents or

Intention to examine property

Where one party in a land exchange deal intended to examine the property before closing but, acting in ignorance of its legal effect, sent a wire accepting the offer and making the contract before he had examined the property, the fact that he had intended to make said examination did not negative the fact that he relied on the other party's misrepresentations.—Fisher v. Examination of land during winter

Plaintiff is not precluded from maintaining suit to rescind an exchange for a ranch on account of defendant's misrepresentations as to its soil, the amount under cultivation, and what was raised on it, because of having visited the place with defendant, when winter conditions prevailed, preventing a thorough examination, and defendant falsely pointing out cultivated land as part of the ranch, and falsely assuring plaintiff of hay and potatoes in the buildings having been raised on the premises.—Larsen v. Lootens, 203 P. 621, 102 Or. 579.

Illness during inspection

In an action to rescind a contract for the exchange of property on the ground of fraud, a complaint alleging that the plaintiffs investigated the property they were to receive before they signed the contract, but that the husband was too ill at the time to make a careful inspection, and that the wife was unfamiliar with business matters, sufficiently excuses the failure of the plaintiffs to detect the falsity of the misrepresentations as to the value of the property and the timber thereon so as to be good against demurrer.—Stockton v. Hind, 196 P. 122, 51 Cal. App. 131.

(c) Means of Knowledge

As a general rule, where the means of information are as accessible to one party as to the other in the exercise of reasonable diligence, and the injured party is not prevented from making a proper inquiry by any artifice or fraud of the other party, the former cannot avoid the contract on the ground of fraud, but positive representations of fact the truth or falsity of which is known by the party making the representations, may be relied on without an independent investigation.

The rule of caveat emptor applies in the case of an exchange of property;⁸ and as a general rule where the means of information are as accessible to one party as to the other in the exercise of reasonable diligence, and the injured party is not prevented from making a proper inquiry by any artifice or fraud of the other party, the former cannot avoid the contract on the ground of fraud.⁹ However, notwithstanding the above rule it has been held that a contracting party is entitled to rely on the express statement as to an existing fact, the truth or falsity of which is known to the party making the statement and unknown to the other party, made for the purpose of inducing the making of the contract, and that he is under no obligation to make further investigation;¹⁰ and that the party making the fraudulent representations for the purpose of inducing the other party to act will not be heard to say that his false statement should not have been believed.¹¹ The guilty party will not be permitted to avoid liability for his false statements on the ground that the defrauded party has acted carelessly or with apparent lack of intelligence,¹² especially where the guilty party in making the representations resorts to conduct which is reasonably calculated to induce the other party to forego investigating or making inquiries.¹³ Where the party to whom fendant in a prior transaction, or even examined him, there was no examination of the horse by plaintiff to make out reliance by him on his own judgment in making the trade, and not on defendant's warranty of soundness of the horse, the fact being that the horse was afflicted with ophthalmia or moon blindness, a condition in which the eyes may appear to be all right and later defective, although defective all the time.—*McNabb v. the representation is made has not equal facilities for ascertaining the truth, he is entitled to rely on the representation.¹⁴ The right of a party to rely on a representation of the opposite party has been upheld where the property as to which the representation was made was real estate in a distant place.¹⁵ A party to a contract is entitled to rely on the other party's representation that he is the owner of certain personalty which the latter is to give in exchange.¹⁶ The question whether the injured party has exercised due diligence may depend on his understanding of the language and the fact that he was not accustomed to transacting business.¹⁷

That the truth or falsity of a certain statement may be determined by an examination of a public record does not prevent such statement from being fraudulent.

The mere fact that the truth or falsity of a certain statement may be determined by an examination of a public record does not prevent such statement from being fraudulent where made as to real¹⁸ or personal property,¹⁹ particularly where the injured party has been induced by the other not to make an examination.²⁰ Of course where an examination of the records does not disclose the facts, the fraudulent character of a representation is not affected.²¹ It seems, however, that, where there is no actual concealment or attempt to conceal the existence of a matter of record, mere failure to mention the fact will not be considered fraud.²²

(7) Fraud of Third Persons

A party is chargeable with false representations of his agent or of third persons for whose reliability he vouches or whose statements he ratifies. An injured party cannot obtain relief for the fraud of his own agent unless the other party participates in or has knowledge of the fraud.

A party is chargeable with false and fraudulent representations of his agent made to induce the exchange.²³ A party may ratify fraudulent representations made by a third person to induce an exchange, although at the time the representations were made such third person had no authority to make the representations in question,²⁴ but no ratification can be implied where the party has no knowledge of the fraud.²⁵ Where the guilty party has referred the other party to a third person for the purpose of obtaining correct information on which he may rely regarding personal²⁶ or real²⁷ property involved in the transaction, he is chargeable with false and fraudulent statements made by such third person. This rule has been applied even where the party chargeable with the fraud has acted in good faith,²⁸ but his mere reference to a third person as one acquainted with the property is not alone sufficient to bind him to the third person's misrepresentations.²⁹ The owner of an interest in land involved in an exchange cannot avoid responsibility for misrepresentations of his coowner where the former has knowledge, or is chargeable with knowledge, of such misrepresentations.³⁰ A party may obtain relief because of the fraud of his own agent where such agent and the other party to the contract were in collusion to defraud the principal,³¹ or where the opposite party, although he has no actual knowledge of the misrepresentations made by the agent of the defrauded party, is chargeable with notice that such agent is using improper methods to bring about the exchange,³² but the injured party cannot obtain relief in the absence of participation or notice,³³ even though the other party retains the benefits of the transaction after knowledge of the fraud.³⁴ Where a contract is entered into through inducements by an agent who secretly acted for both parties contrary to statute, the contract may be rescinded on the grounds of public policy even though there was no intention to defraud.³⁵ Statements of a third person are not chargeable to a party to a contract where such party is not represented by, and has not vouched for, the reliability of such third person.³⁶ A party is not chargeable with the representations of a third person where such representations are not authorized and the exchange results from negotiations between the parties to the contract.³⁷

(8) Resulting Damage or Injury

Injury of some description must result in order that there may be fraud justifying relief but a pecuniary loss is not necessary.

Injury of some description must result in order that there may be fraud justifying relief,³⁸ and where a party receives property of equal value he is not entitled to have the transfer set aside,³⁹ or to recover damages for the misrepresentation;⁴⁰ but it has been held that there may be a rescission in equity without showing a pecuniary loss.⁴¹ In determining whether any loss was suffered through the fraud, the court must ignore the trade or inflated value and determine the matters at issue on the basis of the real value.⁴² Where a contract is entered into through inducements by an agent who secretly acted for both parties contrary to statute, the contract may be rescinded on the grounds of public policy even though no actual damages were suffered.⁴³

Failure to allege and prove injury

Party to exchange of property, failing to allege and prove injuries resulting from perpetration of alleged fraud in inducing exchange, is not entitled to rescission.—Federal Mortg. Co. v. Henslee, Tex.Civ.App., 43 S.W.2d 609.

Accomplishment of purpose in exchange

Misrepresentations inducing plaintiff to exchange her property for other property worth five thousand dollars less than represented caused injury sufficient to sustain an action for deceit, even though plaintiff's purpose in making the exchange had been to secure cash to meet indebtedness and such purpose had not been defeated by the misrepresentations.—Bitondi v. Sheketoff, 99 A. 505, 91 Conn. 505.

(a) Title and Encumbrances

A concealment or false representation with respect to title or encumbrances may constitute fraud.

A concealment or false representation with respect to the title to personal property⁴⁴ or to real estate⁴⁵ may constitute fraud, although the guilty party has given merely a quitclaim deed,⁴⁶ and although complainant has accepted a deed without having a survey made.⁴⁷ A false statement as to, or the concealment of, an encumbrance on real⁴⁸ or personal⁴⁹ property exchanged for other property may constitute fraud, as may statements as to title and encumbrances affecting the value of lien notes or mortgages offered in exchange for other property.⁵⁰ A representation that a mortgage on the property will be extended is material and if false may justify rescission.⁵¹

These rules are subject to the exceptions and qualifications already stated supra in subdivisions a (1)-(8) of this section and a rescission cannot be had for mere expressions of opinion,⁵² or for misrepresentations which are not material⁵³ or which were not relied on.⁵⁴ A misrepresentation as to

title may subject the contract to rescission although it is not known to be false by the party making the statement.⁵⁵

(b) Identity, Location, Boundaries, and Quantity

Fraud may consist of misrepresentations as to the identity, location, boundaries, or quantity of the property offered in exchange.

Fraud may consist of pointing out or describing land different from that contracted for.⁵⁶ The right of the defrauded party to avoid the contract does not depend on the fact that the property pointed out was worth more than the property which was conveyed to him.⁵⁷ The failure to inform a party to the contract, who is inspecting land other than that which it is proposed to give in exchange, of his mistake may constitute fraud.⁵⁸ The conveyance of property different from that specified in the contract, with fraudulent intent, is ground for relief.⁵⁹ Fraud may also consist of misrepresentation as to the location,⁶⁰ boundaries,⁶¹ or area⁶² of land involved in an exchange. Occupancy by another under agreement

Where defendant represented that she had a good title to property, and made an exchange with plaintiffs, and, on attempting to take possession, plaintiffs found another party occupying premises with consent of defendant, under agreement to do work around premises, which had been done, who declined to vacate, it was held that a legal fraud had been perpetrated on plaintiffs, justifying them in rescinding the deal.—Austin v. Ash, 205 N.W. 155, 232 Mich. 251.

The mere expression by defendant that suits concerning land to be exchanged amounted to nothing as affecting the title was but the expression of an opinion on which plaintiff will be presumed equally able to form an opinion and to come to as correct judgment with respect to the matter as were the defendants, who were not lawyers, and plaintiff cannot justly claim to have been misled by such opinion, especially where he visited lawyers for the purpose of obtaining their opinion on the question.—Campbell v. Effect of phrase "more or less"

As respects rescinding exchange, where property was described by metes and bounds, disparity was held not excused by use of phrase healthful condition of a locality may be stated as a fact, and not as a matter of opinion, and a misrepresentation when made to induce an exchange of lands may be fraudulent;⁶³ but a charge of fraud cannot be based on an alleged misrepresentation as to the boundary of real estate where it appears that the party alleged to have made the representation did not attempt to point out the exact lines and in fact did not know them, and that the other party did not at that time consider the exact location of the boundary in question of controlling importance, and asked for no more definite statement as to the boundary than was given to him.⁶⁴ Misrepresentations as to the quantity of personal property offered in exchange for other property may be fraudulent.⁶⁵

These rules are subject to the exceptions and qualifications already stated supra in subdivisions a (1)-(8), of this section. A misrepresentation as to quantity to constitute a basis for relief must be relied on,⁶⁶ and it has been held that a charge of fraud cannot be based on a misrepresentation as to the number of acres in a tract where the correct boundaries have been pointed out and the party to whom the representation is made has notice before deeds are exchanged that there is actually a smaller number of acres in the tract.⁶⁷ Although made in good faith, material misrepresentations as to location⁶⁸ or identity⁶⁹ of land involved in the exchange, or as to the quantity of personal property,⁷⁰ may constitute fraud. A slight variance in the dimensions of property involved not affecting substantially the value of the property is immaterial.⁷¹

(c) Character, Nature, Quality, and Condition

Misrepresentations as to the character, nature, quality, and condition of property may constitute fraud.

Misrepresentations as to the character,⁷² quality,⁷³ or condition⁷⁴ of real estate may be fraudulent. Thus false statements as to the amount of timber on the land involved,⁷⁵ or of tillable land,⁷⁶ as to water supply,⁷⁷ drainage,⁷⁸ kind of soil,⁷⁹ fertility,⁸⁰ crops,⁸¹ yield,⁸² quality or the kinds of trees,⁸³ or to the presence of game⁸⁴ or minerals,⁸⁵ have been held fraudulent. Nature of mortgage

Misrepresentations that mortgages given in exchange for land were purchase-money mortgages, rather

cealment of a defect in quality of personal property may be fraudulent.⁸⁷

These rules are subject to the exceptions and qualifications already stated supra subdivisions (1)-(8) of this section; hence relief cannot be afforded for false representations as to the nature,⁸⁸ condition,⁸⁹ adaptation to particular uses,⁹⁰ quality,⁹¹ or productiveness⁹² of the property involved where it appears that such representations were mere expressions of opinion, or where such representations were not relied on.⁹³ Although made in good faith, material representations as to quality⁹⁴ or condition⁹⁵ of land involved in an exchange, and as to timber on such land,⁹⁶ and as to the quality of personal property,⁹⁷ may constitute fraud.

(d) Value

A mere statement as to the value of property involved is generally a matter of opinion and not ground for relief where the parties deal at arm's length and stand on an equal footing, but misrepresentations as to value made as a matter of fact when to the knowledge of the party making the statements the other party is ignorant of the value and will rely on the statements will justify rescission. The mere fact that one party does not obtain property equal in value to his own does not show fraud, but gross inadequacy of consideration is always a badge of fraud.

Asking price as indicating value

Where plaintiff proposed exchanging her realty for land of defendant's in another county and which she had never seen and, in reply to duced to refrain from an examination of the land involved,⁴ or where for some other reason the parties have not equal means of knowledge.⁵ The rule has also been applied to representations as to corporate stock⁶ or other securities⁷ exchanged for other property, but an exchange is not invalidated on the ground of fraud where there was no express statement or positive assertion as to the value of the personal property involved.⁸ Statements in accordance with highly inflated values which generally prevailed at the time of the exchange are not fraudulent.⁹

These rules are subject to the exceptions and qualifications already stated, supra subdivisions a (1)-(8) of this section, and reliance on the misrepresentations is necessary to justify rescission.¹⁰ Fraud cannot be predicated on false statements as to value where the party claiming fraud is at no disadvantage and has had ample opportunity to examine the property,¹¹ but an inspection by one who has no knowledge of market value does not prevent cancellation for false statements of fact as to value.¹² False representations as to value may be ground for rescission although not known to be false by the party making the representations.¹³

Inadequacy of consideration as showing fraud. The mere fact that a party to a contract does not obtain property equal in value to his own does not show fraud;¹⁴ there must not be such a disparity as will shock the conscience.¹⁵ Gross inadequacy of consideration is always a badge of fraud,¹⁶ and in connection with proof of imposition and misrepresentation on the part of the other party will be sufficient to characterize the transaction as fraudulent in a court of equity.¹⁷ Moreover, inadequacy of consideration may be so gross and palpable as to amount in itself to proof of fraud.¹⁸ The question as to inequality in value is to be determined by reference to the value of the properties involved, at the time of the transaction.¹⁹

(e) Cost, Selling Price, and Profits or Income

Under certain circumstances false representations as to the cost or selling price of property may constitute fraud. Rescission cannot be had for mere expressions of opinion as to future profits or rentals, but false representations as to present profits, income, or rentals when made as statements of fact may be fraudulent.

It has been held that a charge of fraud cannot be based on a mere misstatement as to the cost of the property,²⁰ on a mere statement of the asking price for real property, if the real value is less,²¹ or on an alleged misrepresentation as to the amount of an offer for certain personal property made to the owner who offered such stock in exchange for other property, where it appears that such owner could in good faith have sold it for the sum specified in such alleged misrepresentation;²² but under certain circumstances false representations as to the cost²³ or selling price²⁴ of property offered in exchange falsely made to induce the exchange and her question as to its value, defendant said that he asked one thousand dollars for it, inducing the belief that it was of such value, when in fact it was of much less value, such adroit reply amounted to a "fraudulent misrepresentation" justifying rescission.—Henry v. Collier, 169 P. 636, 69 Okl. 24.

Recital of consideration in former contract

Where defendants procured owner of farm to give her son land contract reciting consideration of seven thousand dollars and other consideration, and had contract assigned to themselves without consideration, it was held that plaintiffs in exchanging lands with defendants, were entitled to believe, and act on belief, that value of farm was in excess of contract price.—*Schliaska v. relied on by the other party may constitute fraud. It has been held that false representations as to the cost of machinery necessary to manufacture an article, the exclusive privilege to sell which is exchanged for certain property, were fraudulent.²⁵ Rescission cannot be had for mere expressions of opinion as to the future profits which may be earned,²⁶ as to future rentals which may be received,²⁷ or as to future volume of business,²⁸ but false representations as to the present profits of, or income from, a business²⁹ or as to the present rental value of, or rentals received from, real property³⁰ may be fraudulent where made as a statement of fact for the purpose of inducing an exchange, even though the party does not know that his representations are false where he makes the statements as based on his own knowledge.³¹ A statement that a party values his equity in certain property at a certain amount is not actionable fraud as a representation that he paid that amount.³²

(f) Prospective Purchaser and Matters Concerning Third Persons

False representations to the effect that there is a prospective purchaser for the property may be fraudulent but not if the other party has ample opportunity to ask the prospective purchaser concerning the truth of the statements. Where the value of the property is dependent on the financial responsibility of another a misrepresentation of his financial status may constitute fraud.

False representations by a party or his agent to the effect that there is a prospective purchaser for the property offered by such party may be fraudulent,³³ but such representations cannot render the contract unenforceable where the party seeking to rescind has had ample opportunity to ask the prospective purchaser concerning the truth of the statements before the contract was entered into.³⁴ Where the value of property is dependent on the financial responsibility of another, a misrepresentation of his financial status may constitute fraud sufficient to vitiate the contract.³⁵

Stock dividends paid from capital

(1) Where dividends paid by a bank were not paid out of the net profits of the bank, but were in fact a distribution of the bank's capital, a representation made as an inducement to the exchange of real estate for bank stock that dividends had been paid was false and material.—J. C. Miller Estate, Inc., v. Drury, 208 P. 77, 120 Wash. 428.

Concealment of knowledge of ordinance affecting rentability

Where one exchanging a building for other real property has actual knowledge of a city ordinance prohibiting the use of a building simultaneously as a garage and as a residence, he is guilty of fraud where he states that the first floor was rented as a garage for twenty-five dollars a month, and the second floor for twenty-five dollars as living or housekeeping rooms, and that the property could be continued for the uses named, the other person not knowing of the ordinance.—Palmiter v. Hackett, 185 P. 1105, 95 Or. 12, modified on other grounds 186 P. 581, 95 Or. 12.

Financial status of mortgagor

Willingness of maker of note to pay

A statement by plaintiff, party to an exchange of lands, that he had received a request from the makers of notes which he proposed to turn over as part consideration, asking him to let them know the balance due, and where to send the money, and that he expected a remittance within the next day or two was a statement of fact and fraudulent if false.—Oxias v. Paustian, Mo.App., 209 S.W. 587.

b. Effect of Fraud

Fraud vitiates the transaction and renders it voidable at the election of the defrauded party. The guilty party cannot take advantage of the fraud and can acquire no right or interest by virtue of it.

Fraud in the exchange of property vitiates the entire transaction between the parties thereto.³⁶ An exchange procured by fraud involving real³⁷ or personal³⁸ property is not void but is voidable at the election of the defrauded party. The guilty party is not entitled to take advantage of the fraud and can acquire no right or interest by virtue of it.³⁹

c. Mistake

A mutual mistake as to a material fact affects the binding force of the contract, but the contract is not unenforceable because of a unilateral mistake as to a fact which could have been ascertained by proper diligence. A mere mistake of law does not render the contract unenforceable.

A mutual mistake as to a material fact affects the binding force of the agreement,⁴⁰ and where there is no agreement as to the identity of the subject matter there can be no contract of exchange, there being no meeting of the minds.⁴¹ A mistake as to subject matter,⁴² title,⁴³ quality,⁴⁴ character,⁴⁵ value,⁴⁶ boundaries,⁴⁷ or condition⁴⁸ of land involved in an exchange may affect the binding force of the agreement in a proper case. An exchange contract is not unenforceable because of a unilateral mistake as to a fact which could have been ascertained by proper diligence before signing,⁴⁹ even though no intervening equities have arisen or the other party has suffered no intervening injury,⁵⁰ and the contract will not be set aside on the ground that one of the parties was misled as to its contents where the contents have been read to him unless some very good reason for so doing exists.⁵¹ A mere mistake of law not accompanied by other circumstances demanding equitable relief does not render a contract unenforceable.⁵² A misapprehension of the amount of encumbrance does not become the basis of a claim that the parties did not agree on the terms of the contract where the conveyance is to be made free of encumbrances by the other party.⁵³

d. Undue Influence and Confidential Relations

Undue influence or a violation of a confidential relationship is a ground for avoiding a contract for the exchange of property.

An exchange of property may be avoided on the ground of undue influence.⁵⁴ Where the parties stand in a confidential relation there is a duty to disclose all material facts affecting the property to be transferred,⁵⁵ and a party may avoid the exchange on the ground that he was overreached by the other party, who occupied a position of advantage because of the former's trust and confidence in such other notwithstanding the former consulted others as to the transaction and was to some extent influenced by them.⁵⁶ False statements as to value when made by a party occupying a confidential position toward the other party may be ground for avoiding the exchange.⁵⁷ Where a person who enjoys the trust and confidence of one party is hired by the other to bring about an exchange, the first party has a right to know the nature and extent of the employment of that person.⁵⁸ An exchange may be avoided on the ground that a party taking advantage of the weak mental condition of the other party has fraudulently acquired from the latter property for much less than its value.⁵⁹

A party as to whom a contract of exchange is vitiated by fraud or mistake may ratify it after acquiring knowledge of the material facts. A ratification of the contract after a breach of condition obviates the effect of such a breach.

A contract obtained by fraud⁶⁰ or entered into by mistake⁶¹ may be ratified, or a right to rescission may be waived, by the conduct of a party after full knowledge of the facts. The question as to whether there has been a ratification by delivery of a deed after the discovery of fraud depends to a large extent on the intention of the defrauded party, such delivery not being a ratification as a matter of law.⁶² Where after the discovery of a fraud which entitles a party to a contract involving the exchange of personal⁶³ or real⁶⁴ property to rescind, such party accepts the benefits of the transaction, uses and deals with the property received by him as his own or does any other act inconsistent with his right to rescind, he thereby ratifies the contract. Thus a sale of the property received,⁶⁵ the execution of a mortgage on such property,⁶⁶ the purchase of an outstanding title to such property,⁶⁷ a suit to compel performance of the contract,⁶⁸ payments on the contract,⁶⁹ the acceptance of payments from the other party in accordance with the contract,⁷⁰ assisting the other party to find a purchaser for the land exchanged,⁷¹ the execution of a receipt in full,⁷² or a long delay in asserting the claim of fraud⁷³ may constitute a ratification of the contract. The consummation of the transaction by a party after he has knowledge or has been put on notice as to the misrepresentations operates as a waiver of the fraud,⁷⁴ but consummation of the contract after discovery of certain misrepresentations is not a waiver of the right to rescind for other misrepresentations not discovered at the time.⁷⁵

The act constituting ratification must be unequivocal and must show an election to retain the property received,⁷⁶ and it has been held that, where the original transaction is infected with fraud, the confirmation of it is so inconsistent with justice and so likely to be accompanied with imposition that the courts watch it with the utmost strictness and do not allow it to stand except on the clearest evidence.⁷⁷

The ratification must be with a knowledge of the material facts,⁷⁸ and usually with knowledge of the legal rights in the premises;⁷⁹ but it has been held that there may be a ratification regardless of whether the defrauded party knows specifically what his legal remedies are and of whether he knows that his act constitutes a ratification.⁸⁰

Ratification of the contract or waiver of the fraud is not established by a delay at the request of the other party to give him opportunity to cure defects in the title,⁸¹ by the exercise of dominion and ownership over the property received in order to preserve or operate it,⁸² by an unaccepted offer to buy back the traded property where the offer in effect is merely to let the trade stand on certain terms,⁸³ by the party seeking an adjustment to remedy the situation and meanwhile paying interest on a note,⁸⁴ or by acts under moral duress.⁸⁵ The mere fact that subsequent to the discovery of the fraud there are negotiations or other transactions looking toward the sale of the property received by the defrauded party does not conclusively establish a ratification where no sale is actually made.⁸⁶

A party is not necessarily precluded from asserting fraud by a "self-reliance clause" in the contract,⁸⁷ or by a provision in the original contract waiving all claims for misrepresentation.⁸⁸

The affirmance of a contract induced by fraudulent representations may be rendered inoperative by subsequent events.⁸⁹ As a general rule there cannot be a ratification of a part of a contract.⁹⁰

A party does not preclude himself from asserting the defense of fraud or seeking to recover damages by accepting the benefits of the transaction and failing to rescind,⁹¹ and use, occupation, and enjoyment of the land received in exchange do not preclude a defense of fraud to a suit on vendor's lien notes which were given in addition to the other property.⁹² A refusal to perform based on one ground waives the right to assert other grounds.⁹³

Breach of condition. Ratification of an exchange after a condition thereof had been breached by the other party has the same effect as though the condition had not been breached.⁹⁴

a. General Rules of Construction

The court must construe the contract and give effect to the intention of the parties, which is to be determined from a consideration of the entire contract and, in case the language is uncertain, of the surrounding circumstances and the construction of it by the parties. Where several writings constitute the agreement, they must be considered together. Where a contract is complete and unambiguous on its face, it will be held to contain the entire agreement of the parties.

The court cannot make a new contract, but its province is to construe and enforce the agreement made by the parties themselves,⁹⁵ and the court must give effect to the intention of the parties.⁹⁶ The intention may be determined from a consideration of the entire contract,⁹⁷ and, when the language is doubtful and uncertain, the circumstances surrounding the parties may be considered.⁹⁸ Where the agreement is embodied in several writings, no one of which shows the whole agreement, they must be construed together for the purpose of determining the whole transaction,⁹⁹ particularly when substantially so provided by statute,¹ but a writing antagonistic to the contract is not to be construed with it where the contract is unambiguous on its face.²

A contract will be construed so as to render it lawful, operative, and reasonable, where it can be done without violating the intention of the parties.³ A construction which will lead to an absurdity will be avoided if possible.⁴

Notwithstanding clerical errors in inserting⁵ or omitting⁶ provisions which would change the intention of the parties, their real intention must be given effect. Conversations and agreements between the contracting parties prior to, or contemporaneous with, the signing of a written contract, and relating to the same subject matter contained in the contract, are presumed to be merged in the final written contract,⁷ and where a contract is complete and unambiguous on its face it will be held to contain the entire agreement of the parties.⁸

The construction placed on the contract by the parties may be considered where such contract is ambiguous, uncertain, or doubtful.⁹ The fact that a contract is for an exchange of realty ordinarily indicates of itself that an exchange of title is contemplated unless it clearly states otherwise.¹⁰

Generally speaking, the construction of a written contract is for the court,¹¹ and where evidence as to the terms of a contract is conflicting, the question is for the jury.¹²

b. Rights and Liabilities of Parties Generally

The rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined from the contract, and no rights or liabilities based on the breach of an invalid contract may arise.

The rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined from the contract,¹³ by a fair and reasonable interpretation thereof,¹⁴ and no rights or liabilities based on the breach of an invalid contract may arise.¹⁵ The right to recover for failure to perform is governed by the facts existing on the day performance was due.¹⁶

c. Covenants, Conditions, Provisos, and Alternative Promises

In the absence of evidence showing a contrary intention the presumption is that the covenants are mutual and dependent but they may be independent in accordance with the intention of the parties. Performance or discharge of the contract may be made subject to a condition or proviso.

In the absence of evidence showing a contrary intention, the presumption is that covenants in a contract for the exchange of property are mutual and dependent,¹⁷ and performance by one party must be given or tendered before performance by the other can be enforced.¹⁸ Any material failure of performance by one party which is not justified by the conduct of the other discharges the latter's duty to give the agreed exchange, even though his promise is not in terms conditional,¹⁹ but an immaterial failure does not operate as such discharge.²⁰

The covenants in an exchange contract are not necessarily dependent, however,²¹ and the parties may provide for the performance by one party before performance by the other party.²² The contract may contain both dependent and independent covenants,²³ and an unconditional promise to convey certain property in exchange for other property will not be construed to be dependent on the happening of an event on which another agreement is founded.²⁴

A contract of exchange may be made subject to a condition precedent,²⁵ or it may provide that the exchange shall be deemed closed and binding on the happening or nonhappening of some particular event.²⁶ The parties may provide for the discharge of the contract, if one of the parties is unable to procure the consent of a third person to the performance of one of the conditions,²⁷ or if no satisfactory adjustment of the broker's commission can be effected.²⁸ That a bill of sale to personal property does not mention a prior condition agreed to orally does not destroy the oral agreement.²⁹

Under a contract by which one of the parties agrees to deliver to the other party specified personal property other than money or a stated amount in cash, the former is entitled to determine whether he shall deliver the property or pay the money.³⁰

A party to a contract cannot avoid performance by having the contract recorded notwithstanding a provision therein that the contract should be void if recorded.³¹

Where one of the parties to an exchange of personal property alleges that, under the agreement, in the event that the property to be transferred to him is not as described, he would be entitled to take other property, evidence to show that there has been no rescission of the contract is admissible in an action by the other party to recover property taken pursuant to such alleged agreement; and in such case evidence that the property which was in the first place to have been transferred to the party claiming such alleged agreement was never received by him is admissible.³²

d. Encumbrances

Rights and liabilities concerning encumbrances are governed by the construction of each particular contract.

Rights and liabilities concerning encumbrances,³³ including mortgages,³⁴ taxes,³⁵ or assessments³⁶ depend on the construction of each particular contract. As a general rule, there must be a provision in the contract for the assumption of an encumbrance on land to be conveyed in order that the party to whom the conveyance is to be made may be held to have assumed the payment of such encumbrance.³⁷ It has been held that the mere fact that a deed provides that certain mortgages "are a part consideration of this deed" does not render the grantee liable for the amount of a mortgage on the property, paid by the grantor, where it appears that the consideration for the conveyance was merely an equity of redemption in other property.³⁸ A provision by which one party is to procure a loan on his farm for a specified amount at a specified rate to run for a time stated and to convey the property subject to the mortgage which is to be assumed by the grantee authorizes the owner of the farm to place on the farm a mortgage in the usual form and containing the conditions usually found in farm mortgages.³⁹ In the absence of any reference to the matter in the contract or deed, a special assessment levied on one party's land after the contract and deed are executed does not constitute an encumbrance on the property conveyed; and in such case the grantee must pay the amount of the special assessment.⁴⁰ Where the contract is silent as to the payment of taxes, the owner, if he is in possession, is bound to pay the taxes which become payable during the period between the making of the contract and the execution of the deed.⁴¹ Under a provision that all obligations of certain leased property shall be adjusted as of a certain date, taxes which were not delinquent although a lien on the property on that date are to be paid by the party receiving the leased property.⁴² A party to the contract is not entitled to recover the amount of a tax on the property received by him where it does not appear that such tax is a valid lien on the property or that he has ever been required to pay it.⁴³ A party to a contract of exchange who has consented to accept the deed of a third person for the land which he was to receive cannot recover from the other party to the exchange an amount which he has been compelled to pay for taxes on the property received where there is no provision in the contract for payment of such taxes by such other party.⁴⁴ A provision that the contract should be of no force if defects should be discovered which could not be removed except by court proceedings does not include liens which may be paid off.⁴⁵ Plaintiff is not entitled to a rescission of an exchange of property on the ground of encumbrance on the title of the property received, where defendant's grantor had obtained a quitclaim deed from the holder of the encumbering tax title, and had conveyed to defendant by warranty deed.⁴⁶

e. Subject Matter and Valuation

The court may consider the circumstances surrounding the transaction where the description of the property is doubtful or uncertain, and except where value or quantity is of the essence a deficiency may be considered immaterial, although it has been held that a party is not required to accept a large deficiency in quantity.

A contract for the exchange of land is not ordinarily to be construed by that strict rule in regard to the quantity of land to be transferred that

Clauses accelerating maturity

Where contract for exchange of farms provided for the execution by one party thereto of separate mortgages on separate tracts of the land received by him on the exchange, this being for his convenience in reselling parts of the tract, and he then lived and expected to continue to live in another county than that in which the land was situated, clauses in the several notes and mortgages, accelerating maturity of the whole debt if the property was sold or the mortgagor removed from the county where the land was situated, were not impliedly called for by the contract of exchange, but

might govern if it were a sale for money,⁴⁷ although it has also been held that the rights of a party are the same as if he had paid the purchase price in cash.⁴⁸ In determining the identity⁴⁹ or quantity⁵⁰ of the property included in a contract, the court may consider the circumstances surrounding the transaction where the description is doubtful or uncertain. Except where value or quantity is of the essence of the exchange,⁵¹ the transaction may be deemed an exchange in gross⁵² and, in the absence of misrepresentations, a deficiency in the estimated amount considered immaterial,⁵³ at least where the deficiency is slight;⁵⁴ but it has also been held that the mere fact that an exchange is in gross does not require a party to accept a large deficiency in the quantity as represented.⁵⁵

The phrase "more or less" in designating quantity ordinarily covers unsubstantial differences as compared to the whole quantity transferred,⁵⁶ but it does not relieve from liability for a gross deficiency in quantity.⁵⁷

The value which is stated as a trading basis is not decisive of the true worth of the property,⁵⁸ and it is not to be construed as fixing the amount a party must pay if he refuses or fails to transfer the property.⁵⁹ Where property is not traded on any basis of represented values, the fact that some of the property transferred by one party is found to be of little or no value does not entitle the other party to damages if he receives exactly what he contracted for.⁶⁰

A party is required to transfer the amount of property stated in the bill of sale, notwithstanding the amount is not stated in the exchange agreement.⁶¹ The amount of boot money fixed definitely and clearly in the contract controls, and it is presumed to include all items.⁶² A contract which provides that a certain building is to be conveyed may be construed as including by implication the land on which such building stands.⁶³ One who is to receive logs to be manufactured into lumber is entitled to logs in good condition.⁶⁴

Corporate stock. It has been held that a contract to exchange goods for corporate stock, without naming its value, calls for the stock at its par value.⁶⁵ A contract providing for the exchange of corporate stock for stock of a new corporation made in the course of the organization of such corporation should not be construed as fixing the absolute value of the securities at the estimated value recited in the contract in the absence of a plain stipulation to that effect.⁶⁶

Provisions for appraisal. Where one of the parties to a contract for the exchange of real property prevents an appraisal, by a specified person, of the properties involved as provided for by the contract, he cannot avail himself of the failure to have the value determined in the mode agreed on.⁶⁷ The right to maintain an action in equity to rescind a contract on the ground that there has been no appraisal in accordance with the provisions of the contract has been denied where each party has entered on the land of the other.⁶⁸ In such case a court of equity may fix the value of the properties involved.⁶⁹ The courts have no power to order a resubmission to appraisers for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the properties involved in an exchange where the contract itself makes no provision therefor.⁷⁰ A provision requiring an appraisal of the property to be taken in exchange if the parties cannot agree as to its value is not for an arbitration in the strict sense, and the award of the appraisers does not have the effect of extinguishing the cause of action on the contract and leaving the parties to their remedies based on the finding of the appraisers, and it has been held that there is no difference in this respect whether the agreement is for appraisers in the first instance or for appraisers only in case the parties fail to agree.⁷¹

f. Time

The entire contract and the duties imposed on each party may be considered in connection with the language employed in determining the time for the performance of the contract. As a general rule time is not considered as of the essence in the absence of an express provision or circumstances which show that the parties so intended.

The entire contract and the duties imposed on each party may be considered in connection with the language employed in determining the date from which a time limit for the performance of a contract begins to run.⁷² A provision that each party shall have a specified time for search of title does not fix the time for closing the transaction.⁷³ A contract providing that one of the parties is to surrender the possession of his property on a specified day and month, the year being omitted, refers to the designated month then next ensuing, in the absence of any implication to the contrary.⁷⁴ A provision that in event of errors appearing in the title the agreement should be extended for a reasonable time for their correction does not apply where there is an absence of title.⁷⁵ It has been held that a note to be given as a part of a consideration on an exchange of real property should bear the same date as the written contract in the absence of any evidence of a contrary intention of the parties.⁷⁶

Sufficiency of performance as to time is considered infra § 12.

Time as essence of contract. Time may be made the essence of a contract for the exchange of realty by express provision to that effect,⁷⁷ or by necessary implication,⁷⁸ and it has been held that at law time is of the essence of a contract to exchange real estate,⁷⁹ but in the absence of an express provision or circumstances which show that the parties intended performance within the time fixed in the contract to be a condition precedent to its performance, as a general rule, time is not considered as of the essence of the contract.⁸⁰ Time is usually of the essence of a contract for the exchange of goods or other personal property which fluctuates in price or is subject to deterioration.⁸¹

A provision that if any defect shall appear after examination of the abstracts the party shall be allowed a certain period of time to remedy the defect bestows that period of time to remedy the defect after the examination of the abstract.—Burks v. Contract for exchange of properties, although providing that it may be declared canceled if a satisfactory adjustment of the real estate agent's commission cannot be effected, not providing any time therefor, time for adjustment is identical with the period named for making the exchange.—Kaufman v. Time for securing loan

Where defendant and plaintiff contracted to exchange realty, plaintiff agreeing to procure a permanent loan of a certain amount on his property, time did not become of the essence of the contract with relation to securing the loan by a letter which contained defendant's construction of the contract as to time of performance.—Keilbert Constr. erty received by him or show a good excuse for not so doing.

The parties may provide for the return or restoration of the property in a certain contingency and such provision may be enforced in the case of either real⁸² or personal⁸³ property, but the privilege of rejecting or returning the property may be waived by a failure promptly to do so,⁸⁴ or by continuing to enjoy or use it.⁸⁵ The party seeking to enforce the agreement must restore or offer to restore all that he has received on the exchange,⁸⁶ or show a good excuse for not doing so.⁸⁷ The parties to a contract for the exchange of personal property for real property may after the exchange enter into a binding contract for the reëxchange of the property;⁸⁸ and a like rule applies in the case of an exchange of personal property for other personal property notwithstanding one of the parties has retained the title to the property originally owned by him as security for an amount due under the original contract; and no demand is necessary to entitle the other party to recover the property originally owned by him where he has returned the property which he received; and in such case the question as to whether the redelivery of the property was absolute is for the jury.⁸⁹

Remedies. Where an exchange is made on the condition that one of the parties may return the personal property received by him on the happening of a certain contingency, relating to the kind, condition, or quality of the property he is receiving, on the breach of such condition, that is, on the happening of the specified contingencies, the party may rescind the exchange, and bring an action at law for the recovery of the property which he gave in exchange.⁹⁰ Where defendant fails to perform a contract for the reëxchange of certain property, a suit by plaintiff to cancel a deed executed by him to defendant as a part of the original exchange is a proper remedy.⁹¹ The party who has the right to return the property received may maintain an action for a breach of the contract to return the property transferred by him.⁹² An action based on the breach of an agreement under seal to repurchase certain corporate stock given as part consideration for other property is properly brought in the name of both parties to whom the shares were originally transferred, although recovery is sought only for refusal to receive the shares transferred to one of such parties and for his benefit.⁹³ A tender back of boot money received on the exchange is not required as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action on the contract to return personal property where a tender would be useless.⁹⁴ In an action based on the refusal to perform an agreement to repurchase at a certain price corporate stock transferred as part consideration for other property plaintiff is entitled to recover the contract price.⁹⁵ Ordinarily the question as to whether the contingency on the happening of which personal property involved in an agreement for an exchange may be returned has occurred is for the jury.⁹⁶ In accordance with the general rules of evidence which apply in actions in which questions as to agreements for return under certain circumstances are involved, evidence has been held admissible,⁹⁷ inadmissible,⁹⁸ or insufficient.⁹⁹ executed on the other, and the mere fact that one of the parties is not to receive his consideration until a future date will not prevent the transaction from being an exchange.¹ It may be executory on both sides.² When the parties agree on a present transfer, the contract is executed rather than executory, and title passes at the time of the execution of the contract,³ but where the contract contemplates a future transfer, title does not pass until the transaction is consummated.⁴ The time at which the title passes under the terms of the contract depends largely on the intention of the parties, and in the absence of a clear expression of such intention a question of fact rather than one of law is presented.⁵ The title to property transferred under a contract which provides for the return of the property on a happening of a certain contingency passes subject to the right of return,⁶ but where a transaction does not amount to a completed exchange and either party is at liberty further to examine the property and return it if not satisfied and retake his own property, the title of the property does not pass until the parties have a reasonable time in which to make the examination and to satisfy themselves as to the representations made in regard to the property.⁷ It is generally held that a person who by fraud induces an exchange acquires title to the property received by him subject to be divested by a rescission of the contract by the defrauded party;⁸ but it has been held that in such case title does not pass,⁹ unless the fraud is merely constructive.¹⁰ The fact that there is a breach of warranty with respect to the property does not prevent the passing of title.¹¹ Where defective goods for which payment has been made are returned in exchange for a new shipment, the title remains in the buyer if the seller refuses to exchange them.¹² The party to whom property has been transferred takes the interest,¹³ and only such interest,¹⁴ as his transferor had. A consignee receiving goods in exchange cannot dispute the title of the consignor without restoring the status.¹⁵

Delivery. Where there is a delivery with intent to pass title, the party to whom delivery is made acquires title,¹⁶ even though he has not fully performed his part of the transaction,¹⁷ but title does not pass until full performance by the party receiving the property if such is the intention of the parties.¹⁸ It has been held that a delivery of possession is not necessarily a condition precedent to the passing of title,¹⁹ although it may be a condition

precedent to the transferee's right of possession.²⁰ Title may vest as the result of the delivery of a bill of sale of the property involved,²¹ but in order that there may be a delivery of a bill of sale the intention to deliver on the part of the person giving it must exist, and the procurement, by fraud, of the transfer of a bill of sale is ineffective.²² It has been held that a recital in the contract to the effect that one party acknowledges payment for certain articles and thereby delivers the articles to the other party has the effect of passing title to such other party.²³ Where performance is to be concurrent and a party performs his part of the agreement by delivery to the other party of the property which the former is to transfer, it has been held that he acquires title to the property which is to be transferred to him.²⁴ Of course, where there has been delivery on both sides with intent to pass title, title passes,²⁵ but without a delivery, actual or constructive, by either party the agreement is merely executory.²⁶ Where a party who has agreed to exchange land for personalty discovers a defect in the title to the land which he has received, and therefore places the personalty in the hands of a third person, with instruction to deliver it to the other party to the exchange on the payment by him of a certain price, this does not operate to transfer the right to possession of the personalty.²⁷ A provision in a contract to the effect that a party thereto "reserves and holds a lien on the" property transferred by him until the other property is delivered does not thereby secure to such party the legal title to the property delivered by him, does not amount to a legal mortgage on the property as security for the consideration to be received from the other party, and secures to the first mentioned party no right to take possession of the property, such provision creating a lien or equitable mortgage enforceable only in equity.²⁸ Where a dealer takes a buyer's old car in partial exchange for a new one, the title to the used car passes to the dealer

although the new car has not been delivered.²⁹ An owner who delivers stock to his agent to be exchanged for other property retains title until the exchange is made.³⁰

As against creditors. Delivery of the personal property has been held to be essential to pass title as against creditors of the party to the exchange who owns such property,³¹ and the mere entry of a record of the exchange in the books of one of the parties to the contract and the execution by him of a trust or consignment receipt to the other party do not constitute a constructive delivery as against creditors of the former,³² but there is other authority to the effect that after all of the conditions of the exchange are fulfilled the mere fact that the property remains in the possession of the former owner does not entitle creditors of the former owner to seize it.³³

(a) In General

A contract for the exchange of real property may be executory or executed dependent on whether the reciprocal conveyances have been made.

A contract for the exchange of lands may be executory on both sides,³⁴ except where it operates, per se, as a reciprocal conveyance of the thing given and of the thing given in exchange.³⁵ Where only one of the parties has performed, the contract is not an executed one.³⁶ A contract to exchange land when executory does not of itself convey title, although it is attested as a deed.³⁷ A grantee is entitled to a proper deed to the land conveyed.³⁸ Realty which is transferred in an exchange becomes the property of the transferee,³⁹ and a party is vested with the legal title as conveyed by the deed.⁴⁰ The title to the property conveyed dates from the execution and delivery of the deed rather than from a judgment upholding the deed.⁴¹ A person who by fraud induces the exchange acquires title to the property conveyed to him subject to be divested by a rescission of the contract at the suit of the defrauded party.⁴²

(b) Equitable Title or Interest

Under an executory contract to exchange, the equitable title to each parcel passes and each party holds the legal title to the land which he has contracted to convey as trustee for the other party.

From the date of an executory contract, the equitable title to each parcel passes and each party holds the legal title to the land which he has contracted to convey as trustee for the other party.⁴³ Moreover, a party who has performed all things by him to be performed,⁴⁴ or who has delivered possession of his land to the other party and who is in possession of the land to be conveyed to him,⁴⁵ has a complete equitable title to the land to be so conveyed superior to the legal title of the other party to the contract. Where one of the parties, each having executed title bonds, agrees that the other party may mortgage the property to be conveyed by him, the former thereby waives his equities under his title bond in favor of the mortgagee.⁴⁶ A party to a contract pursuant to which a deed of the standing timber on land subject to a vendor's lien is given to him acquires an equitable title to such timber subject to such lien, and acquires legal title free from any lien when his grantor discharges the vendor's lien.⁴⁷

(c) Estoppel of Transferee

tract cannot deny the existence of the contract, nor can he dispute the title of the other party and retain the land.

A party cannot, while in undisputed possession under the contract, deny the existence of the agreement, receive the benefits thereof, and hold both tracts, nor can he dispute the title of the other party to the contract and retain the latter's land.⁴⁸ Where a grantee receives an escrow deed before the condition of the escrow has been performed, and subsequently conveys the property to others, he will be estopped to avoid the escrow deed and to say that no title passed to him thereby.⁴⁹

A mere contract to exchange gives no right to possession before delivery of deeds without an express agreement to that effect, but the parties are impliedly required to deliver possession when the transaction is completed.

At common law in the case of an exchange of lands entry must be made on both sides.⁵⁰ A mere contract to exchange lands gives no right to possession before its completion by the delivery of the deeds, without an express agreement to that effect, either in the contract itself or out of it.⁵¹ Where a deed to one of the parcels is placed in escrow to be delivered on performance by the grantee who is let into possession, the transaction is substantially a sale with a reservation of title to secure performance, the grantee giving a bond for title binding him to convey on such performance;⁵² and in such case the party who is given possession has the right to cut a reasonable quantity of wood where the security is not impaired.⁵³ The parties are impliedly required to deliver possession when the deal is closed.⁵⁴ right to rents is in the person holding the legal title. A loss before conveyance falls on the owner where he has not complied with a condition precedent.

It has been held that a person in possession of real property of another is not entitled to reimbursement for improvements made by him, where possession was taken under an unenforceable agreement, improvements were made voluntarily, and the owner of the land was deprived of possession for a considerable period.⁵⁵ The right to the rentals is in accordance with the express provisions of the contract,⁵⁶ and a delay in passing deeds to property does not render ineffective provisions with regard to ownership of rentals after a specified date.⁵⁷ In the absence of a provision in the contract, the right to the rents is in the person holding the legal title.⁵⁸ A party to whom real property is to be conveyed in exchange for other real property is not required to bear the burden of every injury which may be inflicted on the land so to be conveyed, intermediate the contract and delivery of possession, in the absence of a contrary provision in the contract.⁵⁹ Where property involved in an executory contract of exchange is in the possession of the owner and he has not complied with the conditions of the contract as to perfecting title or showing good title on his part to be performed, and the property is destroyed, the loss falls on him.⁶⁰

1. Rights and Liabilities of Third Persons

The rights and liabilities of third persons who acquire property exchanged or subject to a contract of exchange are largely dependent on their status as bona fide or innocent purchasers. One who acquires the rights of a party is entitled to no more than his grantor.

The rights and liabilities of third persons who acquire or deal with property exchanged or subject to a contract of exchange are largely dependent on whether such persons do or do not occupy the status of bona fide or innocent purchasers or encumbrancers.⁶¹ This rule applies to persons claiming under the transferee⁶² or to persons claiming under the transferor.⁶³ The equitable interest acquired by a party to an executory contract prevails against any subsequent encumbrance or conveyance acquired by a third person through the other party, where such third person has notice of the facts.⁶⁴ A third person who acquires the rights of one of the parties to the contract is entitled to no more than his grantor, and he is not entitled to the other property where his grantor has failed to perform,⁶⁵ but he is entitled to a conveyance of the property where performance in full has been rendered.⁶⁶ A third person to whom a party to an exchange of property transfers his right to the property received is entitled to claim the property transferred by such party where it reverts to the latter because of failure of title to the property received on the exchange.⁶⁷ Rights of third persons which have been acquired under a party to a completed exchange cannot be defeated by an executory contract for a reëxchange.⁶⁸ Where the establishment of a cause of action against a party to an exchange is a condition precedent to the liability of a third person, such third person cannot be subjected to liability where such cause of action was not, or could not, be sustained.⁶⁹ A vendor who takes a quitclaim deed from the assignee of his vendee does not thereby assume the obligations of a contract of exchange of the land entered into by the assignee and a third person.⁷⁰ A party who accepts notes and a trust deed from a nominal vendee under his own agent's misrepresentations as to his solvency cannot establish liability of the real vendee for the amount of the notes.⁷¹ Where a party to a contract exchanging equities takes the other's note for the amount of taxes due, he is liable to the owner of the property who is forced to pay the taxes.⁷²

Where one party collects rentals which under the provisions of the contract are owned by the other party, the fact that there was no provision in the contract for payment of the service of collecting does not destroy the owner's right to the rentals.—Stimson v. Reese, Tex.Civ.App., 25 S.W.2d 205.

j. Party to Exchange as Bona Fide Purchaser

A purchase of land by exchange of other land of value or by a relinquishment of all interest in other property is sufficient consideration to constitute one a bona fide purchaser for value. One cannot claim the rights of a bona fide holder where he has knowledge of facts which should put him on notice.

A purchase of land by exchange of other land of value,⁷³ or by a relinquishment of all interest in other property,⁷⁴ has been held to be a sufficient consideration to constitute one a bona fide purchaser for value. A party who has received property on an exchange cannot claim the rights of a bona fide holder where it appears that he had notice of facts from which he could have learned that the person who transferred the property to him was not the real owner.⁷⁵ Where a conveyance of real property to a married woman in exchange for certain personal property is induced by the false representations of her husband and the transaction is for his benefit, the wife is not entitled to the rights of a bona fide purchaser for value.⁷⁶

In a technical exchange of lands there is as incident thereto a warranty of title but not of quantity. On an exchange of personal property in the possession of the parties, there is an implied warranty of title and that the property is free from encumbrances, but there is no warranty as to quality unless expressly or impliedly made by the party transferring the property.

In the case of a technical exchange of lands there is as incident thereto a warranty of title,⁷⁷ but not of quantity, unless so intended by the parties;⁷⁸ but there is no implied warranty of title to land covered by a land office certificate assigned in exchange for other real estate, especially where the assignor declines to give an express warranty.⁷⁹ A provision that "each party to the contract is to furnish an abstract showing a good title to said lands"

does not amount to a warranty of title.⁸⁰ A covenant to the effect that one of the parties guarantees to sell the land conveyed by him for a sum that shall not be less than a specific amount is a guaranty that the equitable estate conveyed is not worth less than the amount specified.⁸¹ A party to a contract who has received land in exchange for other property may in a proper case enforce a guaranty as to the price for which such land may be sold.⁸² It has been held that in a proper case damages may be recovered as for a breach of warranty where contracts for the conveyance of certain lands are transferred in exchange for other property with a warranty as to the equality of the land covered by the contracts for conveyance.⁸³

Personal property. On an exchange of personal property in the possession of the parties to the exchange there is an implied warranty of title,⁸⁴ and that the property is free from encumbrances.⁸⁵ A warranty as to encumbrances on personal property is not satisfied by a subsequent agreement by a mortgagee, made without consideration, to release the mortgage.⁸⁶ There is no implied warranty on the part of a person who exchanges certificates of stock for other property that the corporation issuing them is a corporation de jure, even though the abbreviation "Inc." appears after the name of the corporation.⁸⁷ As in sales, so on an exchange of goods the law does not imply a warranty as to their goodness or quality.⁸⁸ To create an express warranty of quality or condition of personal property offered in exchange for other property, it is not necessary that the word "warrant" or any other particular or formal words of warranty shall be used.⁸⁹ Any affirmation made at the time of the exchange as to the quality or condition of the property will be treated as a warranty if it is so intended and if the other party acquires property on the faith of such affirmation.⁹⁰ The value of personal property offered in exchange for other property may be made the subject of warranty.⁹¹ A party may in express terms give a warranty against an obvious defect in personal property, where the extent of the defect cannot be determined at the time by the other party,⁹² or where there is uncertainty and the representation is not glaringly inconsistent with the obvious condition and quality of the property.⁹³ It has been held that a party to whom a warranty is given that notes of a third person offered to him are a lien on certain real property has a right to rely on the statement, although he is in as good a position as the person making it to ascertain the facts.⁹⁴ A statement made by a party, which amounts to nothing more than a mere commendation of the goods offered by him, a puffing of wares as it is sometimes called, is not a warranty.⁹⁵ A party who in connection with the exchange warrants the income from a business is not liable on the warranty where such warranty is conditioned on the existence of certain facts and such facts are not shown to exist.⁹⁶ A provision in a contract for the exchange of lands to the effect that as part of the consideration one party "agrees to deliver" to the other certain personal property does not necessarily imply that the personal property is free from encumbrances.⁹⁷ An express warranty should be given a reasonable construction.⁹⁸

§ 8. Modification

A contract for the exchange of property may be modified by mutual consent of the parties; the modification must be supported by a consideration and must be in writing when a written agreement is required under the statute of frauds.

The parties to a contract for the exchange of property may by agreement modify such contract.⁹⁹ A claim under the original contract may then be met by the new agreement so far as the new agreement operates to alter the original one.¹ However, the terms of the original contract which are not altered remain operative.²

Where personal property is transferred to two persons who contract jointly and who are not partners, one of such persons has no right to modify the terms of the contract without the concurrence of his coöwner.³

Requisites. A modification of a contract for the exchange of property may be effected by parol agreement,⁴ provided a writing is not required under the statute of frauds.⁵ The consent of both parties is essential to the modification of the con-

Title

Where a contract for the exchange of real property contains a clause providing that chandeliers, gas fixtures, ranges, and "all personal property belonging to the parties" on the premises are included in the mutual warranty of title, the words quoted being written in a blank in the printed form, the written words must be construed as relating only to chattels not specifically enumerated, and the warranty is broken if title to the enumerated chattels fails.—Rosenzweig v. § 9. Termination and Rescission

A contract for the exchange of property may be terminated by mutual consent of the parties or under an express stipulation in the contract giving one of the parties the right to rescind on the happening of certain conditions.

A contract for the exchange of real property,⁸ personal property,⁹ or real property for personal property¹⁰ may be rescinded or abandoned by mutual consent. The consent of both parties is essential to a mutual abandonment or rescission.¹¹

By the abandonment or rescission by mutual consent, the contract ceases to exist and neither party can thereafter invoke its terms or protection against the other;¹² and where an oral contract is abrogated by the substitution of an unconditional written agreement, nonperformance or breach of the written agreement does not reinstate the oral contract.¹³ On termination of the contract by consent, the consideration or property received by a party pursuant to the agreement must be returned.¹⁴ However, the mere agreement to rescind does not ipso facto restore to either party what he parted with, in the absence of an apparent intent that the agreement alone shall have such effect;¹⁵ where no such intent is apparent, whatever was necessary in the first instance to constitute the original exchange a legal transfer is equally necessary to effect a reëxchange.¹⁶ Where one party has come into possession of personal property of the other

Implied consent

Grantor's consent that name of one of grantees be stricken from deed requiring grantee to pay certain indebtedness must be implied from fact that such grantor enabled escrow to be closed by conveying property to sole remaining grantee.—Smith v. Brown, 36 P.2d 1081, 1 Cal.App.2d 492.

Sufficiency of consideration

(1) Abandonment of written exchange agreement and substitution of new terms, whereby each party received valuable property subject to encumbrances, constituted "valuable consideration" for subsequent oral agreement.—Tucker v. Newton, 256 P. 440, 83 Cal.App. 148.

(2) Where the parties to a contract to exchange an apartment house and residence for a farm, the owner of which agreed to deliver possession by warranty deed clear of encumbrances, were ignorant of the fact that the tenant had planted crops and understood that it should be delivered without being so planted, an agreement by the apartment house owner, after the tenant's refusal to surrender possession until compensated for his work and expense, to pay part of the amount of a promissory note executed by the farm owner to the tenant for such purpose, was supported by sufficient consideration, the rule that a promise to pay something for what promisee is already bound to do by the contract is nudum pactum, being inapplicable, where unexpected obstacles which the parties could not reasonably foresee, make performance more onerous or less advantageous than anticipated and require, equitably at least, a readjustment of the contractual relations.—Silver v. Holt, 210 P. 985, 61 Utah 57.

(3) Where one making exchange of live stock took note for "boot," containing provision excluding warranties, thereafter agreed with maker of note that latter should return one mule and he would exchange it for another, that, if mules died, it should be original owner's loss, and that, if maker would feed mule, owner would pay cost thereof, agreement was supported by maker's promise to feed as well as to restore mule to vendor.—Widincamp v. Patterson, 127 S.E. 158, 33 Ga.App. 483.

Where property was exchanged, and plaintiff paid six hundred and twenty dollars, which was a condition precedent to be performed before the defendant became liable, and defendant notified plaintiff that he did not want to trade, plaintiff, by accepting the sum of money he paid to defendant, thereby consented to a cancellation of the contract.—Ayers v. Conduct indicating consent or acquiescence

That plaintiff, a party to a contract for exchange of property, became dissatisfied and refused to take possession of property conveyed to him, thus obliging defendant to retain possession and operate business, did not constitute mutual rescission, or acquiescence by defendant in plaintiff's attempted rescission.—White v. Oregon Realty Exch. Inv. Co., 236 P. 269, 114 Or. 636.

party, an action to recover such property or its value will lie.¹⁷ Where deeds have passed, an action of ejectment by one party will lie to recover possession of his land from the other party.¹⁸

Option to terminate and forfeiture. Apart from the right to terminate or rescind a contract for exchange arising by operation of law from the wrong or default of the adverse party, considered infra § 10, a party may have the right to terminate the contract under certain circumstances by virtue of a stipulation to that effect in the contract itself.¹⁹ Where the contract does not expressly provide that it shall be null and void on the happening of a stated contingency, but merely gives a right or option to terminate, a reasonable notice of an intention to terminate is required;²⁰ and the contract remains binding until the option to terminate it is exercised.²¹ The right to terminate or rescind the contract is not waived by the retention of the property received by the rescinding party, where the opposite party refuses or delays in accepting the property tendered to him in due time.²²

The right to terminate the contract may be accompanied by a right to declare a forfeiture.²³ However, forfeitures are not favored and a court will not enforce a forfeiture unless the person claiming the right appears to be without fraud and the other party's default is not attributable to the former's conduct or acquiescence.²⁴

Effect of death of party. An executory contract for the exchange of lands is not, it seems, discharged by the death of a party prior to the time fixed for performance,²⁵ but in the case of a common-law exchange of lands, if either party dies before entry, the exchange is void.²⁶

Premature delivery by escrow agent. Where one of the parties to a contract of exchange has performed his obligations, the fact that the escrow agent had prematurely delivered the deed to him does not furnish the other party with a ground for rescission in the absence of injury.²⁷

a. In General

Subject to certain limitations and qualifications, a contract for exchange of property may be rescinded by either party for good cause.

Subject to the limitations and qualifications hereinafter considered in this section, a contract for the exchange of property may be rescinded by either party for good cause.²⁸ Where personal property is transferred to two persons who have contracted jointly and who are not partners, one of such persons has no authority to rescind the con-

Effect of waiver; notice

Alteration of contract

A note added to a contract to exchange lands in so far as containing a provision beneficial to defendants would furnish no reason for their terminating the contract and refusing to perform, even though it may have been added after the contract was signed.—Le Marinel v. Bach, 196 P. 22, 114 Wash. 651.

Variety of parties as affecting rescission

Mere variety of parties with whom purchaser was caused to deal could not defeat purchaser's rescission of property exchange.—Gould v. James, 299 P. 275, 43 Wyo. 161.

tract without the concurrence of his coöwner.²⁹ The fact that a contract for the exchange of real property is executed does not prevent rescission.³⁰

b. Grounds

Fraud, mutual mistake, failure of consideration, failure or refusal to perform, and breach of warranty may constitute grounds for rescission of a contract for exchange.

An executory contract for the exchange of property or the exchange itself is vitiated by fraud, and if either party has been induced by the fraud of the other to make the exchange, he may rescind.³¹ The right to rescind exists although the contract is in writing.³²

The right of a party to rescind for fraud does not depend on the relative values of the properties involved, but solely on whether he was to get under the terms of the contract what he was led to believe he was trading for,³³ although it has been held that a party to a contract for exchange is not entitled to rescission if he has suffered no injury

Mistake. Mutual mistake is ground for rescission of a contract for the exchange of property.³⁵ However, a party to a contract for the exchange of personal property cannot avoid such contract on the ground of mistake after it has been executed, where it does not appear that the mistake was shared by the other party, or that such other party had knowledge of the mistake of the party who seeks to avoid the contract.³⁶

Nonperformance and failure of consideration. While there is some authority for the view that a party to a contract for the exchange of personal property who has delivered his property and has thereby acquired title to, but has not received the other party's property, cannot rescind the contract,³⁷ and that an executed contract for the exchange of real property cannot be rescinded for the failure of the opposite party to perform an act in the future, in the absence of a showing that the promise to do such act was made for the purpose

Analogy to sale

"A defrauded party to an exchange of personal property has the same right to rescission as would a defrauded buyer or seller at common law."—Arlidge v. Ridge, 12 Tenn. App. 415, 417.

Extent of fraud

Fraud must be such as to prevent the passing of title.—Achenbach v. Mears, 261 N.W. 251, 272 Mich. 74.

Fraudulent concealment

Lot owner, contracting in good faith to exchange lot for other realty after purchasing it at trustee's sale under former owner's trust deed, was not bound by constructive knowledge of state of his title or pendency of insolvency proceedings against former owner, and therefore was not guilty of fraudulent concealment entitling the opposite party to rescind.—Rogers v. Roop, 92 S.W. 2d 423, 19 Tenn.App. 579.

Danger of eviction

Innocent purchaser for value, without notice of interest held by heirs of vendor's deceased wife, was entitled to rescission of exchange of property, where deed did not cover all land which grantor said would be included, so that as to land not included in deed grantee stood in danger of eviction.—Mead v. King, Tex.Civ.App., 285 S.W. 832.

In Georgia rescission of a horse trade, where a right to rescind is not expressly reserved, cannot be had for constructive fraud or merely on account of a warranty, express or implied; there must be actual fraud, and plaintiff must show that defendant knowingly made false representations with intent to deceive, and that he was deceived and suffered damage thereby.—Johnson v. Fulford, 7 S.E.2d 574, 61 Ga.App. 805—Hendley v. Chambliss, 119 S.E. 351, 30 Ga.App. 736—Bowden v. King, 106 S.E. 926, 26 Ga.App. 705—Newkirk v. Burts & Goodman, 104 S.E. 456, 25 Ga.App. 689—West v. Innocent misrepresentation that mortgage on property was held by bank warranted rescission of contract for mutual mistake and failure of consideration.—Greene v. Adomaitis, 156 N.E. 695, 259 Mass. 605.

Prescription as curing deficiency in amount of land

Plaintiffs who contracted with defendants for exchange of realty and personality and thereafter ascertained by survey that fence which defendants had pointed out was located beyond true boundary line were not precluded from rescinding contract for mistake on ground that defendants had acquired title to strip between true boundary line and fence by prescription, in absence of evidence as to adjoining landowner's rights.—Garland v. Shrier, 64 P.2d 530, 155 Or. 387.

Where mistake in deed is corrected as soon as it is discovered, it furnishes no ground for rescission.—Johnson v. Franks, 9 S.W.2d 796, 177 Ark. 1194.

of defrauding and without any intent to fulfill it,³⁸ the general rule is that failure or refusal to perform in accordance with the provisions of the contract of exchange is ground for rescission,³⁹ at least where the contract of exchange is still executory.⁴⁰ A party is not entitled to rescind the contract on the alleged ground that the other party has not performed where he himself is in default,⁴¹ or where his own neglect or failure is responsible for the other party's failure to perform.⁴²

The failure of consideration for an exchange of property gives the right to a rescission.⁴³ However, there is authority to the effect that where, in a fair transaction, one commodity is given simply in exchange for another, the party receiving such commodity in exchange cannot repudiate the arrangement and demand other compensation, because the commodity which he accepted has proved to be of no value.⁴⁴ A partial failure of consideration has been held to afford no ground for disaffirming the executed portions of the contract,⁴⁵ at least where the breach is compensable in damages.⁴⁶ Where one party has received a deed of land in an exchange of property, it has been held that he cannot rescind on the mere ground of failure of title and must seek his remedy on the covenants of the deed;⁴⁷ but there is also authority to the effect that where an owner of land, agreeing to convey

Repudiation

In action to recover damages sustained when defendants rescinded a contract for exchange of property and refused restitution to plaintiffs, where prior to time plaintiffs' note became due, defendants denied plaintiffs' right to the property which plaintiffs were entitled to receive in exchange, threatened unlawful detainer and thus denied plaintiffs' right to pay the note when due and receive title to the property, such acts constituted a repudiation of the exchange agreement so that plaintiffs were entitled to rescind the contract and sue for damages.—McMillon v. Triplett, 118 S.W.2d 515, 233 Mo.App. 325.

Acts not constituting nonperformance

(1) Defendant, assigning interest in bank stock and note after contracting to deliver them to plaintiff, did not rescind contract.—Combined Metals v. Bastian, 267 P. 1020, 71 Utah 535.

(2) Failure to pay cash provided for in exchange contract was not ground for rescission, in view of payments by escrow agent to satisfy mortgages on plaintiffs' property.

—Malcolm v. Tate, 267 P. 527, 125 Or. 419.

(3) Where under contract of exchange of realty, defendant assumed a mortgage for twenty thousand dollars and was to pay plaintiff four thousand five hundred dollars, but could retain what he had to pay in excess of liens amounting to twenty thousand dollars against the land, his retention of part of the money agreed to be paid to reimburse for a payment in excess of the specified amount, and also to protect himself against an unpaid judgment for three thousand dollars, constituting a lien on the land was justified and did not entitle the other party to rescission.—Hamann v. Egan, 184 N.W. 236, 44 S.D. 416.

Failure of any one of parties to exchange agreement to perform constituted failure of consideration, within statute authorizing rescission of entire transaction where there is a failure of consideration.—Lasher v. Faw, 289 P. 821, 209 Cal. 726.

Failure to pay taxes

Party to contract for exchange of properties had right to end negotiations where, after three months, other party had failed to pay taxes on her property as required by contract.—Jackson v. Thompson, Tex. Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 1055.

Investment certificates illegally issued

Agreement under which land was to be exchanged for investment certificates in corporation became voidable when certificates were issued contrary to terms of permit which was issued by corporation commissioner and which prohibited issuance of investment certificates by corporation in exchange for real property.—Setchell v. Where consideration for transfer of building was parol promise to open store therein for the benefit of the community, and also agreement to convey lands, and the lands were conveyed but the parol promise was not performed, the remedy of rescission was not available to the promisees.—Douthitt v. Chenoweth, Mo.App., 34 S.W.2d 556.

47. Ind.—Deford v. Urbain, 48 Ind. 219.

Defendant's failure to pay off mortgage

One exchanging for land forming a part of a larger tract covered by a mortgage, with full knowledge of the facts, is not entitled to cancellation on the ground of failure of consideration because his vendor failed to pay off the mortgage on the whole property, and it was lost on foreclosure, there being no fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment of fact.—

the same to another in exchange for personalty, fails to convey good title to the land, the owner of the personalty may affirm the contract and sue for damages, or he may rescind the contract, and demand that the owner of the land place him in statu quo by restoring to him the property delivered in fulfillment of the contract.⁴⁸ Where a contract for the exchange of realty has been executed, the burning of a building on one of the properties does not constitute a failure of consideration justifying a rescission.⁴⁹

Breach of warranty. There is a conflict of authority with respect to the right to rescind for a mere breach of warranty of personal property; some courts recognize the right to rescind in the case of a breach of warranty of quality or condition⁵⁰ although there is no express provision for rescission,⁵¹ and there is no fraud.⁵² The right to rescind has been recognized even where the defects were obvious.⁵³ The right to rescind for breach of warranty of title is also recognized in some jurisdictions.⁵⁴

In other jurisdictions, however, the right to rescind is denied where it is not reserved in the contract and no question of fraud is involved, in the case of a breach of warranty of quality, or condition,⁵⁵ or of title;⁵⁶ but the right to rescind has been recognized where the existence of an encumbrance has been fraudulently concealed.⁵⁷ Where the privilege of returning is superadded to an express warranty, the injured person has the right to rescind.⁵⁸ Where the contract provides that if the article is not as represented the party transferring it may either rescind the contract and return the property which the other party delivered in exchange, or pay the appraised value of the property delivered, on the return of, or offer to return, the consideration received by such other party, the privilege of paying the appraised value is forfeited where the party transferring the warranted article has failed to avail himself of it.⁵⁹

c. Time for Rescission

A party who desires to rescind a contract for exchange must act promptly, or at least within a reasonable time after discovery of the facts furnishing the ground for rescission.

discovery of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry which would disclose such facts.⁶¹

What is a reasonable time in which to rescind depends on the circumstances of the particular case.⁶² Mere lapse of time⁶³ before the discovery of the fraud,⁶⁴ and even after the fraud has been discovered,⁶⁵ will not necessarily bar the right to rescind, although delay after the discovery of fraud may be material as evidence of an election to affirm.⁶⁶ A more important consideration is whether, as a result of the delay, there has been a change in the situation of the alleged wrongdoer or in the condition or value of the property to his detriment.⁶⁷ Delay caused by the wrongdoer's continuing fraud does not prevent rescission.⁶⁸

Whether the act of avoidance is within a reasonable time is a question of law to be decided by the court on all the circumstances of the case unless something equivocal in the circumstances or material facts in dispute requires submission to the jury with instructions.⁶⁹

d. Election to Rescind, Notice, and Demand

A party who seeks to rescind a contract for the exchange of property should take steps sufficient to show his election to rescind.

Where a party seeks to rescind a contract for the exchange of property on account of the wrong or default of the other party, he should take steps sufficient to show his election to rescind.⁷⁰ In the case of personal property, an action for the possession of the property given in exchange is a sufficiently definite disaffirmance of the contract and election to rescind.⁷¹ Where the parties have exchanged lands, but deeds are not delivered pursuant to agreement, ejectment will not lie to recover the land for such failure, without notice and an offer to rescind the contract,⁷² but there is authority that of the seventy five acres in cultivation, and represented by defendant to be on the ranch, was on a neighbor's land.—Larsen v. Lootens, 203 P. 621, 102 Or. 579.

(4) Plaintiff, offering to rescind contract exchanging lands immediately after discovering fraud ten months after contract, was not barred by laches from seeking rescission.—Cooper v. Whitehead, 136 S.E. 911, 163 Ga. 662.

the party who has legal title to lands, possession of which was given pursuant to an oral exchange of lands, may maintain ejectment without making an offer to rescind.⁷³

Demand for performance. It has been held that a party has no right to rescind the contract and to recover the value of the property transferred by him without properly demanding of the other party that he complete performance of his obligations under the contract which he has almost entirely performed.⁷⁴

e. Restoration of Status Quo

As a general rule a contract for the exchange of property may not be rescinded unless the parties are restored to the status quo.

A rescission of a contract for the exchange of property on account of the wrong or default of the other party demands, as a general rule, the restoration of the status quo of the parties.⁷⁵ Until a party has returned the property which he himself has received, or has made a valid tender of the return thereof, he cannot ordinarily rescind an exchange for fraud,⁷⁶ mutual mistake,⁷⁷ breach of warranty,⁷⁸ nonperformance,⁷⁹ failure of title,⁸⁰ or, it seems, duress.⁸¹ A party is not entitled to rescission if he has rendered impossible the restitution of the property or interest therein by permitting its

v. Rudnick, 183 N.E. 348, 281 Mass. 205—23 C.J. p 213 note 41.

Restoration to status as lessee

Exchange of plaintiff's home for defendant's lease of an apartment house, accomplished by defendant having his lease canceled and another lease executed to plaintiff, can be rescinded on tender of an assignment of the lease without consent of the lessor, the lease containing no provision against assignment.—Spencer v. Deems, 185 P. 671, 43 Cal.App. 601.

Balancing receipts and disbursements

(1) Where defendants took possession of plaintiff's land under parol contract of exchange and received sufficient rents and profits to discharge debt secured by plaintiff's deed of such land to defendant, given prior to such contract, plaintiff could sue for rescission of contract, and accounting and recovery of land, and since an accounting between parties was necessary to fix amount of debt, if any, no formal tender of amount due defendant was necessary.—Fletcher v. Fletcher, 124 S. E. 722, 158 Ga. 899.

(2) Where defendant in suit to rescind exchange of property received some eight hundred dollars more from sale of oil leases on land than amounts paid to discharge mortgage and back taxes, other party to exchange who received land to which title was bad was entitled to rescind, notwithstanding defendant's discharge of mortgage and back taxes.—Sherman v. forfeiture or the foreclosure of an encumbrance thereon,⁸² or by placing additional encumbrances on it.⁸³

Reservation of the right to rescind, within a certain time on certain conditions, does not entitle the party in whose favor the reservation is made to reclaim the property given by him without returning the property received by him or tendering a return thereof.⁸⁴ Ordinarily, the fact that the defrauded party returned all but a small part of the consideration received does not aid him,⁸⁵ even though the retention was the result of a mistake.⁸⁶

Property to be restored. The party seeking to rescind need not return property received by him which was not involved in the exchange.⁸⁷ Where the defrauded party receives money in addition to goods, and the other party has sold the goods received by him on the exchange, it has been held that the defrauded party need not offer to return the money as well as the goods.⁸⁸ Where the defrauded party elects to treat a fraudulent exchange as void, and the title of the chattel received by him has wholly failed, he may rescind the exchange without transferring to the other party a good title to such chattel which he has subsequently obtained from a third person.⁸⁹

Bailees of property. A person who has received certain property of which the transferor was a mere bailee, in exchange for other property, cannot rescind the contract of exchange without returning to the bailor the property received on the exchange where the bailor has succeeded to the bailee's possessory right to the property so received.⁹⁰ The mere fact that the rescinding party has retained the property after the refusal of the other party to receive it and uses it occasionally does not affect the rescission where his possession is that of a bailee.⁹¹ Even where in such case the rescinding party uses the retained property regularly, his rights with respect to rescission are not lost where such use does not amount to an assertion of title in himself nor a denial of the other party's ownership.⁹² However, in such case the rescinding party should hold the property retained merely as the bailee of the owner.⁹³

When restoration unnecessary. Both in the case of fraud⁹⁴ and breach of warranty,⁹⁵ the return of the property received is not required where the injured party has been rendered unable to make restoration by the conduct or fault of the other party. Where without fault on the part of the injured party the property received has been so changed or lost that it cannot be restored in specie, the contract may nevertheless be rescinded on equitable terms.⁹⁶

Remedy by rescission is not lost by party to exchange because of title being taken in name of wife, she joining him in suit.—Jasper v. Price, 158 N.E. 504, 261 Maas. 103.

Termination of litigation involving property

Rescission of contract for exchange of property was not defeated because property became involved in litigation, which plaintiff successfully cleared up in reasonable time, so that he was able to reconvey free of all encumbrances.—Pyle v. Goddard, 272 P. 144, 127 Kan. 20.

Doing equity where property not returned see infra this subdivision of this section.

Property encumbered

(1) Where defendants were guilty of fraud in effecting an exchange of land, plaintiff may obtain rescission of the contract, even though she had, before discovery of the fraud, entered into a cropping contract, judgment that defendant shall receive the share of the crops which plaintiff would otherwise have received being a sufficient provision

No return of the property is necessary where nothing would be saved to the wrongdoer by its return.⁹⁷ Where the consideration received is absolutely worthless, no tender or return is necessary in the case of either fraud,⁹⁸ or breach of warranty.⁹⁹

The injured party is not required to deliver personalty which is already in the constructive possession of the other party,¹ and he need not offer to make restitution where the agreement is purely executory on the part of his adversary.² No tender before bringing suit is necessary, it has been held, where the injured party seeks rescission and cancellation by decree of court, at least where the suit for rescission and cancellation is in equity.³

Where the defrauded party is unable to locate the other party because he has left the neighborhood, a failure to return the property is excused.⁴

Waiver. A party may waive the requirement that the goods must be returned to the place of delivery as a condition precedent to rescission on the part of the defrauded party and may accept the goods at another place.⁵ A positive refusal to rescind an exchange excuses the necessity for a formal tender of the property received.⁶ A ground for the refusal by the wrongdoer to accept the return of the property transferred in exchange may be waived by placing such refusal on a different ground.⁷

The rescinding party may waive the requirement that his adversary must restore him to the status quo.⁸

Doing equity where property not returned. Restoration of the status quo is necessary only to the extent that the equities of the case require.⁹ Although a return of the property or a tender thereof may be excused, the rescinding party is not relieved of the obligation of doing equity;¹⁰ and, indeed, it has been held proper for such party to offer, at the time of rescission or in the petition for rescission and cancellation, as the case may be, to do whatever equity or a court of equity may require toward restoring the opposite party to the status quo.¹¹ for restoration.—Hegel v. Hannas, 184 P. 898, 43 Cal.App. 218.

(2) Cancellation of contract of exchange, except as to certain property, was not precluded by mortgage placed on defendant's property by rescinding party, in view of credit given defendant on property not to be reconveyed equal to the amount of the mortgage.—Barnett v. Cobb, 250 P. 57, 140 Wash. 538.

Sale to minimize damages

The right to rescission is not barred where after discovering the facts on which the rescission is based and for the purpose of minimizing damages the injured party sells part of the property.

Insanity of person to whom property conveyed

That one seeking to rescind contract for exchange of lands for fraud was unable to tender land received because of insanity of husband, to whom title was conveyed, did not excuse offer to make what

Effect of refusal to accept property. A tender of the consideration received made within a reasonable time after the discovery of the ground for rescission is, although refused, as effectual to rescind the contract as if the party to whom the offer is made had accepted it,¹² and the loss or destruction of the property thereafter without fault on the part of the rescinding party does not defeat his right of rescission.¹³

Decree of rescission. A decree rescinding a contract for the exchange of property should effect a restoration of the status quo to the extent that the equities of the case require.¹⁴ Where one party is entitled to rescission and does rescind, the opposite party, if unable to restore the property he received, will be required to make compensation in money.¹⁵ In addition to the return of the properties, the decree in a suit for rescission should make an equitable adjustment of other values received and surrendered by the respective parties before the termination of the contract.¹⁶

f. Waiver or Loss of Right to Rescind

A party waives his right to rescind a contract for exchange where after discovering the facts furnishing a ground for rescission he uses and deals with the property as his own or does any other act inconsistent with his right to rescind.

Where after the discovery of a fraud,¹⁷ breach of warranty,¹⁸ or inability of the other party to perform in full,¹⁹ entitling a party to an exchange

Measure of restitution

(1) On rescission, for defendant's false representations, of an exchange of property, defendant having sold the property which he received from plaintiff, plaintiff is entitled to recover its fair cash value, not its speculative value.—Nordstrom v. Hover, 189 P. 999, 111 Wash. 176.

(2) The measure of restitution is the value of farm conveyed by plaintiff when trade was made, and not what defendant thereafter received on its sale.—Bauer v. O'Brien Land Co., 174 N.W. 736, 144 Minn. 130.

Payments received and rental value

to rescind, such party uses and deals with the property received by him as his own or does any other act inconsistent with his right to rescind, he thereby waives such right. Rescission for delay in performance cannot be had when the delay beyond the agreed date is assented to, or requested by, the complaining party.²⁰ After an attempted rescission a party may lose his right to rescind by his subsequent conduct inconsistent with his claim of such right.²¹

When right not lost. Unless the delay or acts of the defrauded or injured party amount to an actual waiver, or involve some act which will prevent the other party from being put in as good condition as he was before, the right to rescind will not be lost,²² and this is true even though the party seeking to rescind may actually retain²³ or use²⁴ the property. The right of rescission is not waived or lost by possession of, and dominion over, the property where the rescinding party was at the time not familiar with the facts entitling him to rescind,²⁵ and his acts of ownership were induced by the continuing fraud of the other party.²⁶

While an election to sue for damages for the fraud binds the defrauded party and he cannot thereafter rescind the contract,²⁷ where he merely offers to rescind he still has his election to sue in equity for rescission or at law for damages.²⁸

The right to rescind because of the fraudulent concealment of the existence of a mortgage on personal property cannot be defeated by the procurement by the guilty party of a release of the mortgage.²⁹ An act performed by the defrauded party which is merely for the purpose of preventing further loss without any purpose to give up

whatever right he may have either at law or in equity to rescind does not affect such right.³⁰ Where one of the parties returned a horse received by him, on the ground that it was not as represented, and received another horse in its stead which he also returned for the same reason, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the party affirmed the first exchange by receiving the second horse.³¹

A party does not lose his right to rescind in so far as the contract affects third persons, who are not bona fide purchasers, by acts performed by him without knowledge of the facts affecting the rights of such third persons.³²

g. Partial Rescission

Unless the provisions of a contract for exchange are divisible, a rescission must be in toto.

A rescission of a contract for exchange must be in toto; a party cannot affirm an entire contract in part and repudiate it in part.³³ The right to rescind in part has been recognized where provisions of the contract were divisible.³⁴

h. Operation and Effect

The rescission of a contract for exchange terminates the contract and in the case of personalty, title may revert in the injured party.

After a rescission of a contract for the exchange of property, the rescinding party cannot insist on performance.³⁵ The original contract cannot be restored without the consent of the rescinding party.³⁶ The mere fact that after a party to a contract has rescinded he expresses a willingness to go on with the transaction, which proposal is ignored by the other party, does not operate to reinstate the contract.³⁷

§ 11. Performance

- a. In general
- b. Time for performance
- c. Demand
- d. Tender
- e. Excuses for nonperformance and waiver of performance

a. In General

A contract for exchange must be performed in accordance with its terms and a party who has not so performed, or is not ready, able, and willing to do so, cannot ordinarily take advantage of the other party's default.

As a general rule a contract for the exchange of property must be performed in accordance with its terms.⁴¹ A party who has not performed or tendered performance,⁴² or who is not ready, willing,⁴³ and able⁴⁴ to perform cannot ordinarily take advantage of an alleged default of the adverse party, although it seems that he can recover back such part of the consideration as he may have advanced.⁴⁵

A provision in a contract for the exchange of real property that, in case one of the parties shall not be able to give a deed, he will pay to the other party a specified amount on a day named is intended as security to indemnify such other party against loss in case a merchantable title cannot be conveyed, and does not contemplate that the agreement shall be in the alternative for the conveyance or for the payment of the amount specified in case a good title cannot be conveyed.⁴⁶

Conditions and dependent and independent covenants or promises. A party cannot rely on an alleged default of the other party where the former has failed to comply with certain provisions of the contract which constitute a condition prece-

Ability at time performance is due

In an action for specific performance, or in the alternative to enforce payment of the penalty, of a contract to exchange realty which was made in good faith, it was only necessary for plaintiffs to be able to convey a good title at the time for performance.—Thompson, Swan & Lee v. Schneider, 221 P. 334, 127 Wash. 533.

Conveyance free of encumbrance

Where realty exchange contract

provided that plaintiff would convey tract to defendant free of encumbrance, and would put in suitable sewer service for the tract, and plaintiff subsequently dedicated six-foot strip across the tract for sewer designed to serve other property as well as the tract, plaintiff put it out of his power to convey the tract free from "encumbrance" and could not have performed his contractual obligations, and therefore was not entitled to recover on contract for defendant's failure to perform.—*Miller v. Forfeiture of deposit in lieu of performance

Clause of contract for exchange of property providing for forfeiture of deposit in event of breach constituted provision to secure performance rather than to give absolution for nonperformance.—Vittor v. Szymanski, 184 A. 27, 321 Pa. 345.

dent to performance by the other party.⁴⁷ A contract to exchange real estate which the parties do not own, "provided title can be procured and made," is a contingent contract, and is not binding if the parties are unable to comply with the conditions.⁴⁸

In the absence of anything to show a contrary intention, the contract must be performed on both sides concurrently in the case of an exchange of real property,⁴⁹ of personal property,⁵⁰ or of real property for personal property.⁵¹ Neither party therefore can put the other party in default except by full performance on his own part or a proper tender thereof unless performance and tender have been excused.⁵² Where, however, a contract for the exchange of personal property contains independent covenants, it is not necessary to show performance of such a covenant in order to recover on the agreement of the adverse party.⁵³ Where one of the parties to an exchange of personal property performs without insisting on contemporaneous performance by the other party, the right of contemporaneous performance is waived.⁵⁴

b. Time for Performance

Where no time for performance is fixed in a contract for exchange a reasonable time is allowed. Provisions as to time of performance may be waived.

A party is entitled to a reasonable time for performance of a contract for exchange of property where no time is fixed in the contract,⁵⁵ but he must act in good faith⁵⁶ and perform or tender performance within a reasonable time.⁵⁷ What constitutes a reasonable time for delivery of certain personalty in exchange for other personalty does not depend on the ability to deliver of the party who agrees to make such delivery.⁵⁸ The entire contract and the various duties imposed on the parties should be considered in determining the date from which the time limit fixed in the contract for exchanging deeds is to run.⁵⁹

Where time is not of the essence, performance by one party substantially within the time fixed has been held sufficient to entitle him to damages for breach by the other party;⁶⁰ but it has also been held that at law substantial compliance with a provision as to time does not entitle a party to recover damages against the other party for breach of contract,⁶¹ although it is sufficient to entitle him to specific performance.⁶²

Waiver. Provisions of the contract as to the time of performance, including provisions which make time of the essence, may be waived.⁶³ A party to a contract under which the consideration for real property transferred by him is to be paid by the delivery of personal property in installments may waive as to any installment the provision of the contract making time of the essence.⁶⁴ Where

Delay of one day

Where time is not of the essence of the contract for the exchange of real property, the mere fact that a satisfactory title policy is not furnished on the day appointed for the settlement does not justify a refusal to accept such a policy and a good title on the following day.—Lamb v. Adams, 18 Pa.Dist. 110.

64. N.D.—Timmins v. Russell, 99 N.

a party stipulates that he will give written notice of his election to take advantage of a breach where time is of the essence of the agreement, an unreasonable delay in giving this notice is equivalent to an assurance that as to that default the provision with respect to time has been waived.⁶⁵

Where one of the parties grants the other party time after default but fixes no certain time, the law will allow a reasonable time.⁶⁶

c. Demand

Under certain circumstances a demand for performance of a contract for exchange is necessary in order to put the other party in default.

Where no time is fixed by the contract for delivery of personal property in exchange for other property a demand is necessary in order to put in default the party who was to deliver such personal property;⁶⁷ but there is authority for the view that usually demand is not necessary, although no time is fixed for performance, where a reasonable time has elapsed.⁶⁸ Where plaintiff by complete performance has waived simultaneous performance on the part of defendant, it seems that a demand is necessary in order to maintain an action for the recovery of the personal property which was to have been delivered to plaintiff, or its value.⁶⁹ A demand which would be unavailing need not be made where there is a failure to transfer personal⁷⁰ or real⁷¹ property.

Where under the terms of the contract one of the parties is entitled to deliver property other than money or to pay in cash, the other party must make a demand for performance in the alternative.⁷² A demand need not be made as a condition precedent to an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered where there is a mere reservation by defendant of a privilege to deliver goods in payment.⁷³

Sufficiency. Where one of the parties is to designate the kind of property which is to be delivered to him in exchange for other property already delivered, the demand must include a designation of the kind selected.⁷⁴ Where by the terms of the exchange one of the parties is not to deliver the property to be transferred by him unless a written order from one of two partners who made the exchange with the first mentioned party is presented, a demand by the other partner is insufficient where no written order is produced.⁷⁵

- (1) Real property
- (2) Personal property

(1) Real Property

A tender of performance of an obligation to transfer real property in exchange must be unconditional, and must be made in good faith, in due time, and in accordance with the terms of the contract. Under some circumstances formal tender is not necessary.

In order to be effective, a tender of performance of an obligation to transfer real property under a contract for exchange must be unconditional,⁷⁶ must be made in good faith,⁷⁷ in due time,⁷⁸ and in accordance with the provisions of the contract,⁷⁹ and, likewise, such tender of per-

78. Tender held seasonable

Plaintiff's tender of complete performance of contract to exchange properties, made thirty days from date of original offer of defendant, was made within reasonable time specified by contract within which to tender complete performance.—Chapman v. Milliken, 239 P. 4, 136 Wash. 74.

Tender held sufficient

(1) Party to agreement to exchange realty who complied with all conditions except to execute necessary deed, trust deeds, and releases, which were to be executed, delivered, and recorded through title company when other party paid agreed sum of money to company, made sufficient tender of performance when other party refused to pay money and repudiated agreement.—Herman v. Savage, 61 P.2d 1195, 17 Cal.App. 2d 238.

(2) Under a contract wherein defendant agreed to exchange land subject to thirty thousand dollars mortgage, to be extended, defendant's offer to have the mortgage extended in the sum of twenty five thousand dollars, plaintiff to give defendant a second mortgage for five thousand dollars, was a substantial performance, defendant being unable to obtain a loan of thirty thousand

formance must be kept good,⁸⁰ and must be made to the party entitled to receive it.⁸¹ Actual production of the agreed difference in value may be waived by a party to a contract for the exchange of real property.⁸²

When unnecessary. A formal tender may be rendered unnecessary by a party's notice that he does not intend to comply with the contract,⁸³ or that he will not accept tender if it should be made,⁸⁴ or by his having put it out of his power to perform by conveying his property.⁸⁵ However, it has been held that the conveyance of a party's interest in real property involved to a third person does not excuse a tender where the conveyance is made for the purpose of getting the title under the control of the grantor and such third person is ready and willing to convey in accordance with the terms of the contract of exchange.⁸⁶

Effect of death of party. A party is not in default, although there was no tender by him during the period fixed by the contract where the other party died during such period and an administrator was not appointed until a subsequent time.⁸⁷

Examination after tender. The party to whom a tender of a deed of land is made is entitled to a reasonable opportunity to examine and determine what is tendered where the contract provides that he is to pay the land for a stock of goods.⁸⁸

Intermediate injuries to property. A party whose property has been injured intermediate the making of the contract and the date on which possession is to be given should offer compensation to the other party on offering possession, where under the contract the burden of such injuries is not to be borne by the other party.⁸⁹

(2) Personal Property

In order to put the opposite party in default, a party must tender performance of an obligation to transfer personal property in exchange in accordance with the terms of the contract, unless such tender would be useless.

In order to put a party in default, the other party must tender performance of an obligation to transfer personal property in exchange in conformity with the terms of the contract,⁹⁰ unless such tender would be useless.⁹¹ The party to whom the tender is made must by himself or his agent have knowledge of such tender.⁹² The tender must be made in good faith.⁹³

The mere fact that one of the parties waits several days before tendering performance and demanding performance by the other party after the latter has stated that he will not deliver does not affect the first mentioned party's right to recover.⁹⁴

e. Excuses for Nonperformance and Waiver of Performance

Failure to perform a contract for exchange of property is excused where performance is prevented by the acts of the opposite party, or where the other party absolutely repudiates the contract or is unable to perform. Strict performance may be waived.

The inability of a party to a contract for the exchange of real property to perform because of accident, want of means, insolvency, or other such reason, does not excuse nonperformance.⁹⁵ Where

Decline in price of produce

Material decline in price of farm products did not justify delay in consummating exchange of properties under contract requiring removal of certain liens, where this set of circumstances was not in parties' contemplation when contract was executed.—Rayburn v. Blechschmidt, 23 P.2d 550, 143 Or. 640.

Disappearance of escrow agent with papers

Plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance of contract for exchange of properties, where plaintiff's paper evidence of title was lost through disappearance of depository under escrow agreement.—Frankiewicz v. Konwinski, 224 N.W. 368, 246 Mich. 473.

a party has accepted a conveyance with covenants against encumbrances, it has been held that he cannot refuse to convey to the other party merely because of the existence of encumbrances, or because he has not been reimbursed for expenditures which he has been compelled to make on account of such encumbrances.⁹⁶ A party cannot take advantage of any default of the other party occasioned by his own laches.⁹⁷

A failure to perform or to perform further in accordance with the contract is excused where performance is prevented by the acts of the opposite party,⁹⁸ or where the other party absolutely repudiates the contract and refuses to perform⁹⁹ or is unable to perform.¹ However, the fact that one party refused to perform does not excuse the other party from showing that he was ready, willing, and able to perform,² especially where he declines to accept the refusal as final and the party who refuses indicates before the final day for performance his willingness to carry out the contract.³ The mere fact that a party who seeks to take advantage of a breach of the other party was in a position to make a more favorable contract with a third person does not excuse such breach.⁴

Waiver. Strict performance of the provisions of the contract may be waived.⁵ Thus objections as to the performance by one party may be waived by the other party's reliance on other and different objections.⁶

Failure to comply with decree

Failure of a party to agreement to exchange properties to comply with court's decree granting ten days to examine the abstract and furnish a statement of objections and requirements of his attorney thereto was held not to be allowed to prejudice his right to demand and receive a merchantable title, together with an abstract showing the same.—McCormick v. McIntire, 185 N.W. 454, 192 Iowa 746.

Performance held waived

(1) Where a contract provided that plaintiff was to receive a bond for a warranty deed, the acceptance by plaintiff of a bond requiring the conveyance of a good title, free and clear of all liens and encumbrances, was a waiver of any right to a bond for a warranty deed.—Bowe v. Wright, C.C.A.Colo., 281 F. 946.

(2) Defendant by turning over his cattle to plaintiff, which by the terms of their contract of exchange he was not to do until plaintiff had performed his part of the contract, must be considered as having accepted the mere inclusion of water stock in a deed of land from plaintiff to defendant, as a transfer thereof, which plaintiff was to make.—Rubey v. Clammer, 194 P. 360, 69 Colo. 329.

(3) That with knowledge that plaintiff had not reduced mortgage on her land defendant consummated land exchange agreement constituted waiver of plaintiff's obligation to secure reduction.—Tulburt v. Hourscht, 248 N.W. 192, 61 S.D. 231.

Performance held not waived

(1) Party contracting to exchange property doing rightful acts, although waiving right to timely abstract, did not waive right to have it examined and defects rectified as provided.—Powell v. Dorton, 12 S. W.2d 453, 321 Mo. 639.

(2) Failure to return deed not complying with contract, and left with agent refusing to accept it, was not acceptance thereof.—Hosmer v. Butler, 143 A. 526, 108 Conn. 465.

(3) Existence of two years' lease and year's unpaid taxes on land, agreed to be exchanged, was waived by purchaser's failure to object thereto or to take steps to rescind.—Harris v. Bills, 213 N.W. 929, 203 Iowa 1034.

Estoppel

(1) Where the contract provided that defendant deliver the deed and certificate of title to the escrow agent who in turn would deliver it to plaintiff, the retention by plaintiff of the deed alone before defendant had delivered the certificate of title to the escrow agent, did not estop plaintiff from claiming a defect in title on subsequent receipt of the certificate of title, where defendant was not misled and did not change his position.—Imes v. MacDonald, 298 P. 173, 113 Cal.App. 427.

(2) Where realty exchange contract provided that plaintiff would convey tract to defendant free of encumbrance, and would put in suitable sewer service for the tract, and plaintiff subsequently dedicated six-foot strip across the tract for sewer designed to serve other property as well as the tract, duty to inform defendant of dedication was on plaintiff, and defendant who first learned of dedication after action was commenced on exchange contract was not precluded or "estopped" from asserting as a defense to the action that plaintiff had put it out of his power to convey tract free of encumbrance.—Miller v. Schwinn, Inc., 113 F.2d 748, 72 App.D.C. 282.

When a contract is fully performed by one of the parties, an offer of part performance by the other is no consideration for an alleged waiver of full performance.⁷

§ 12. — Sufficiency

- a. In general
- b. Estate and title
- c. Delivery and acceptance of property

a. In General

If the party seeking to enforce a contract for the exchange of property has substantially and in good faith complied with his obligations, it is ordinarily sufficient, although strict performance has been held essential in actions for damages.

If the party seeking to enforce a contract for the exchange of property has substantially and in good faith complied with his obligations thereunder, it is sufficient,⁸ at least for the purposes of a suit in equity, as for specific performance;⁹ but in an action for damages for breach of contract strict compliance with the provisions of the contract has been held essential.¹⁰

Where a contract provides that one of the parties shall have a specified time to reject the property traded to him, a statement by him, written on the contract, to the effect that he accepts the above property does not constitute an acceptance by him of other property, where a description of such other property is inserted in the contract after the date of the above acceptance.¹¹

A provision of a contract to the effect that each party is "to be the judge" as to representations

with respect to the real property involved does not give the right arbitrarily to reject the property offered, but there must be a fair and candid judgment such as an honest and reasonable man would exercise.¹²

b. Estate and Title

- (1) In general
- (2) What constitutes "good" or "marketable" title
- (3) Encumbrances
- (4) Abstracts of title
- (5) Sufficiency of deed
- (6) Bond to perfect title
- (7) Objections to title and waiver

(1) In General

A party is not bound to accept a title to real property which is not in accordance with the contract for exchange.

A party to a contract for the exchange of property is not bound to accept a title to real property which is not in accordance with the contract.¹³ It has been held or stated that he is entitled to a deed conveying a good title,¹⁴ a good and marketable title,¹⁵ an indefeasible legal title,¹⁶ a perfect legal title,¹⁷ or a perfect title, clear of all defects and encumbrances.¹⁸ A party is not required to accept a doubtful title to land.¹⁹ A party to a contract for the exchange of real estate by warranty deeds impliedly agrees to deliver a marketable title to the other party to the exchange.²⁰

A provision authorizing a rejection of title "if any defect should be found in the title" does not

Dedication to public

Defendant's objection, to title offered by plaintiff, that the land as originally platted had an alleyway across a part of it which had been dedicated by the plat to the public, was not a valid objection, where the alley was never opened and never accepted or used by public, and all the deeds made to the addition did not refer to the alley.—Holloway v.

condemn title for lack of record evidence,²¹ but it does not require a party to take a record title if it is overshadowed by a title outside the record.²²

Satisfaction of party or approval by third person. In the case of a provision in a contract for the exchange of lands that the title shall be "satisfactory," the party to be satisfied is the judge of his own satisfaction.²³ However, such party should fairly and candidly investigate and consider the matter, reach a genuine conclusion and express the true state of his mind, and he cannot act arbitrarily or capriciously or merely feign dissatisfaction.²⁴ It is of no consequence that a court or a jury might believe that a party should be satisfied or that a reasonably prudent purchaser would be satisfied.²⁵

A contract may properly provide that the attorney for the party who is to receive a conveyance may determine whether the title as shown by the abstract is in accordance with the terms of the contract;²⁶ but such provision must be carried out in good faith and the attorney may not arbitrarily and without just reason decide that the title is defective.²⁷

(2) What Constitutes "Good" or "Marketable" Title

In contracts for exchange a good title, as applied to realty, refers to a fee simple estate and a marketable title is one which can be sold or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence.

In contracts for the exchange of property the phrase "good title," as applied to land means an estate in fee simple,²⁸ and requires the transfer of a "marketable" title.²⁹ A contract by which a party is to receive a good unencumbered title to real estate entitles him to a title reasonably free from faults which would affect the value or security of possession.³⁰ A clear title means one free from material defects.³¹

A marketable title is one which can be sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence as security for a loan of money,³² or one about which there can be no fair and reasonable doubt.³³ A title in litigation is not marketable,³⁴ and a party to a contract providing for the exchange of deeds conveying good and marketable titles to the respective properties cannot be required to accept title from the other party with an equitable title outstanding in a third person.³⁵ The question as to whether a title tendered is a marketable title is one of law.³⁶

A provision for a "merchantable" title requires a title which can be sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence for a loan of money.³⁷

Title based on estoppel or adverse possession. A party need not accept a title resting only on an estoppel in pais.³⁸

Unless the contract otherwise provides,³⁹ a title based on adverse possession may constitute a good⁴⁰ or a marketable⁴¹ title, which must be ac-

Validity dependent on extrinsic evidence

While such a condition is satisfied by tender of a title to which there is no reasonable objection, such title should be deducible from the record without reference to extrinsic evidence; if resort to extrinsic evidence is necessary, the objection of the party to be satisfied is reasonable.—Williams v. Unadjudicated title

Under contract for marketable rec-

When a contract is fully performed by one of the parties, an offer of part performance by the other is no consideration for an alleged waiver of full performance.⁷

§ 12. — Sufficiency

- a. In general
- b. Estate and title
- c. Delivery and acceptance of property

a. In General

If the party seeking to enforce a contract for the exchange of property has substantially and in good faith complied with his obligations, it is ordinarily sufficient, although strict performance has been held essential in actions for damages.

If the party seeking to enforce a contract for the exchange of property has substantially and in good faith complied with his obligations thereunder, it is sufficient,⁸ at least for the purposes of a suit in equity, as for specific performance;⁹ but in an action for damages for breach of contract strict compliance with the provisions of the contract has been held essential.¹⁰

Where a contract provides that one of the parties shall have a specified time to reject the property traded to him, a statement by him, written on the contract, to the effect that he accepts the above property does not constitute an acceptance by him of other property, where a description of such other property is inserted in the contract after the date of the above acceptance.¹¹

with respect to the real property involved does not give the right arbitrarily to reject the property offered, but there must be a fair and candid judgment such as an honest and reasonable man would exercise.¹²

(1) In General

A party is not bound to accept a title to real property which is not in accordance with the contract for exchange.

A party to a contract for the exchange of property is not bound to accept a title to real property which is not in accordance with the contract.¹³ It has been held or stated that he is entitled to a deed conveying a good title,¹⁴ a good and marketable title,¹⁵ an indefeasible legal title,¹⁶ a perfect legal title,¹⁷ or a perfect title, clear of all defects and encumbrances.¹⁸ A party is not required to accept a doubtful title to land.¹⁹ A party to a contract for the exchange of real estate by warranty deeds impliedly agrees to deliver a marketable title to the other party to the exchange.²⁰

A provision authorizing a rejection of title "if any defect should be found in the title" does not

Dedication to public

Defendant's objection, to title offered by plaintiff, that the land as originally platted had an alleyway across a part of it which had been dedicated by the plat to the public, was not a valid objection, where the alley was never opened and never accepted or used by public, and all the deeds made to the addition did not refer to the alley.—Holloway v.

condemn title for lack of record evidence,²¹ but it does not require a party to take a record title if it is overshadowed by a title outside the record.²²

Satisfaction of party or approval by third person. In the case of a provision in a contract for the exchange of lands that the title shall be "satisfactory," the party to be satisfied is the judge of his own satisfaction.²³ However, such party should fairly and candidly investigate and consider the matter, reach a genuine conclusion and express the true state of his mind, and he cannot act arbitrarily or capriciously or merely feign dissatisfaction.²⁴ It is of no consequence that a court or a jury might believe that a party should be satisfied or that a reasonably prudent purchaser would be satisfied.²⁵

A contract may properly provide that the attorney for the party who is to receive a conveyance may determine whether the title as shown by the abstract is in accordance with the terms of the contract;²⁶ but such provision must be carried out in good faith and the attorney may not arbitrarily and without just reason decide that the title is defective.²⁷

(2) What Constitutes "Good" or "Marketable" Title

In contracts for exchange a good title, as applied to realty, refers to a fee simple estate and a marketable title is one which can be sold or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence.

In contracts for the exchange of property the

phrase "good title," as applied to land means an estate in fee simple,²⁸ and requires the transfer of a "marketable" title.²⁹ A contract by which a party is to receive a good unencumbered title to real estate entitles him to a title reasonably free from faults which would affect the value or security of possession.³⁰ A clear title means one free from material defects.³¹

A marketable title is one which can be sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence as security for a loan of money,³² or one about which there can be no fair and reasonable doubt.³³ A title in litigation is not marketable,³⁴ and a party to a contract providing for the exchange of deeds conveying good and marketable titles to the respective properties cannot be required to accept title from the other party with an equitable title outstanding in a third person.³⁵ The question as to whether a title tendered is a marketable title is one of law.³⁶

A provision for a "merchantable" title requires a title which can be sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence for a loan of money.³⁷

Title based on estoppel or adverse possession. A party need not accept a title resting only on an estoppel in pais.³⁸

Unless the contract otherwise provides,³⁹ a title based on adverse possession may constitute a good⁴⁰ or a marketable⁴¹ title, which must be ac-

Validity dependent on extrinsic evidence

While such a condition is satisfied by tender of a title to which there is no reasonable objection, such title should be deducible from the record without reference to extrinsic evidence; if resort to extrinsic evidence is necessary, the objection of the party to be satisfied is reasonable.—Williams v. Unadjudicated title

Title of third person. As a general rule under a contract providing that a party shall transfer certain land, tender of the deed of a third person is insufficient.⁴³ However, a party to a contract for the exchange of lands may waive the requirement of a personal deed from the other party and accept title from another source in full discharge of such other party's obligation.⁴⁴ It has been held that the fact that a party agreed to convey by full covenant deed when the title was in a third person is not ground for the other party's refusal to perform when at the time for passing title the first mentioned party tenders a full covenant deed to the property, executed by such third person, and offers to join in such deed in order to be bound by the covenants.⁴⁵

(3) Encumbrances

A party to an exchange contract is not bound to accept property subject to an encumbrance not contemplated by the contract, or which is less favorable to him in its terms than one provided for in the agreement.

A party to a contract for the exchange of real property is not bound to accept property subject to an encumbrance which is not contemplated by the contract,⁴⁶ or which is less favorable to him in its terms than the one provided for in the agreement,⁴⁷ even though the encumbrance is a matter of record.⁴⁸ However, it has been held that a party cannot avoid liability on his agreement merely because the amount of the encumbrances on the property to be conveyed by him is represented by several mortgages instead of one as was represented to him.⁴⁹

The existence of a private right of way⁵⁰ or of oil and gas leases⁵¹ not in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made has been held sufficient ground for a refusal to perform. Nevertheless the establishment of a levee and a drainage ditch has been held not to be a taking or encumbrance of land constituting a breach of contract providing for conveyance with covenants of warranty.⁵²

It has been held that encumbrances on real property of a trifling character do not constitute ground

ord title, purchaser was not required to accept title based on adverse possession not adjudicated.—Scott v. Stanley, 270 P. 110, 149 Wash. 29.

Property held encumbered

(1) Encumbrance for public improvement existed when contract for exchange of property was made, and on date fixed for performance, although amount had not been calculated, where all work had been completed except finishing filling of ditch in which sewer pipe was laid.—Stewart v. Black, 67 S.W.2d 684, 252 Ky. 511.

plaintiff subsequently dedicated a six-foot strip across tract for sewer designed to serve other property as well as the tract, and record disclosed that it would have been feasible to furnish the tract, sewer facilities without dedication of portion thereof for common sewer line, and defendant was not informed that dedication would be made, provision requiring plaintiff to put in sewer facilities did not except dedication incident thereto from constituting an "encumbrance" and the dedication violated the plaintiff's undertaking to convey the tract free from encumbrance.—Miller v. Schwinn, Inc., 113 F.2d 748, 72 App.D.C. 282.

(3) Lease on property, vacant when exchanged and to be occupied by purchaser, authorized purchaser to rescind exchange.—Altman v. Massell Realty Co., 146 S.E. 849, 167 Ga. 828.

Property held not unduly encumbered

(1) Where one-month lease was, by consent of parties to contract for exchange of property, included in adjustment of rents, and not considered an encumbrance, the existence thereof did not constitute an encumbrance in violation of the contract.—Romanoff v. De Santo, 126 A. 694, 101 Conn. 504.

(2) The statutory lien on a farm for the future payment of annual assessments levied by a drainage district was not an encumbrance, as that term is used in an ordinary contract for exchange of farms.—

Cramblitt v. Sherwood, 199 P. 925, 109 Kan. 458.

(3) The organization of a drainage district does not constitute an encumbrance on the land in the district within the meaning of the contract for the exchange of real property, and the apportionment of assessments for improvements is not such an encumbrance until they have ripened into a tax and the tax has become a lien on the land under the general tax law.—White v. Immenschuh, 187 P. 667, 106 Kan. 333.

for the adverse party's refusal to perform,⁵³ and substantial compliance with provisions as to encumbrances on real property may be sufficient.⁵⁴ The fact that an encumbrance has been placed on the property as the result of collusion between one of the coöwners of such property and the party to the contract to whom it is to be conveyed does not excuse the latter from performing where the enforcement of the contract is sought by the innocent owner of the property in question.⁵⁵ The fact that certain encumbrances are discharged with money obtained from a different source from that originally agreed on between the coöwners of such real property does not warrant a refusal of performance by the latter.⁵⁶

Where a party with encumbered property is prepared to transfer the lien to the property he is acquiring coincidentally with the exchange so that the other party will acquire a clear title, the other party cannot refuse to perform on the ground that the lien had not been removed earlier.⁵⁷

(4) Abstracts of Title

Where a contract for exchange requires an abstract of title showing the title contracted for, such abstract is, unless waived, essential to complete performance by one party and a condition precedent to performance by the other party.

The contract may provide that an abstract of title shall be furnished, and in such cases the furnishing of an abstract of the title contemplated in compliance with the terms of the contract is necessary to the complete performance of the contract by one party,⁵⁸ and a condition precedent to the necessity of performance by the other;⁵⁹ but the party entitled to such an abstract may waive either his right to receive it⁶⁰ or objections to one that has been furnished.⁶¹

As a general rule the abstract cannot be aided by anything aliunde,⁶² such as a mere statement of the party offering it⁶³ or his agent,⁶⁴ an affidavit made on information and belief and without personal knowledge of the facts,⁶⁵ or the affidavit of a third person where the conditions are such that the party to whom the abstract is offered may be unable to procure the evidence of such third person if it should become necessary for such party's protection.⁶⁶ It is not sufficient that the title is in fact good,⁶⁷ merchantable,⁶⁸ or perfect,⁶⁹ where the contract provides for an abstract showing such a title, but it should so appear on the records as epitomized in the abstract.⁷⁰

The fact that an abstracter's signature to the abstract is illegible is not a ground for refusing

Amount of mortgage debt and taxes

The fact that defendant learned that the amount of the mortgage debt which he was to assume was three thousand three hundred and fifty-five dollars and twenty cents instead of three thousand three hundred dollars and the fact that plaintiff's deed contained provision defendant should pay taxes for 1928, which plaintiff had burden of paying under statute, in absence of contrary agreement, did not authorize defendant to repudiate exchange agreement where he had two hundred dollars which he was to pay to plaintiff for farming implements, and was thus amply protected against these additional encumbrances.—Huff v. Showing merchantable title

(2) In an action for breach of a contract for the exchange of lands, providing that each party was to furnish an abstract showing a merchantable title, where plaintiff produced an abstract showing title outstanding in a stranger, the court properly directed a verdict for defendants, plaintiffs claiming under a land contract which was not shown by the abstract.—Efrusy v. Mack, 188 N.W. 374, 219 Mich. 85.

(3) A contract for exchange of property requiring abstract of title showing it to be "merchantable" means a good, marketable title, such as would be conveyed by an ordinary warranty deed, and failure to furnish such an abstract is nonperformance.—Genske v. Jensen, 205 N.W. 548, 188 Wis. 17.

performance.⁷¹ Where the contract merely requires that the abstractor shall be reliable it is not necessary that he should be bonded.⁷² Where a contract provides merely that a party to the contract shall take land subject to a mortgage it is not necessary that the abstract should show such mortgage.⁷³ Under a provision that in case the abstract of title furnished by either party should be defective, such party shall have a reasonable time for having such abstract corrected, a default cannot be imputed to a party offering a defective abstract until the expiration of a reasonable time.⁷⁴

The interpretation and effect of an abstract⁷⁵ and of the accompanying affidavits⁷⁶ is for the court.

(5) Sufficiency of Deed

An executory exchange contract providing for a general warranty deed calls for a deed with full covenants; and in the absence of a contrary stipulation, a party is entitled to a warranty deed.

An executory contract for exchange which provides for a general warranty deed calls for a deed with full covenants.⁷⁷ In the absence of special stipulations to the contrary, a party is entitled to a warranty deed of the land which is to be conveyed to him.⁷⁸ A contract which provides that the parties are to make a good and lawful title clear of all charges, costs, disputes, encumbrances, etc., requires deeds with general warranties.⁷⁹

A provision that a party is to make or cause to be made a deed in fee for certain land requires a deed not merely good in form but one fully operative to pass an indefeasible fee simple estate.⁸⁰ A party may properly refuse to accept a deed purporting to convey a smaller number of acres than as represented by the other party, although the contract provides for a transfer in gross, where the representation is constructively fraudulent.⁸¹

Quitclaim deed. Where the contract provides for a quitclaim deed, such a deed is sufficient.⁸² It has been held that an agreement to give "good title" to the land does not necessarily entitle the opposite party to a warranty deed since the right of property and of exclusive possession which constitutes good title may be effectually vested in him by a deed of quitclaim.⁸³

(6) Bond to Perfect Title

A party to a contract for exchange is not ordinarily bound to accept a bond to perfect title, although he may, and sometimes under the terms of the contract must, do so.

While a party to a contract for exchange by which the other party is to convey land may,⁸⁴ and sometimes under the terms of the contract must,⁸⁵ accept a bond to perfect title, ordinarily he is not obliged to accept such a bond.⁸⁶

(7) Objections to Title and Waiver

Objections to the title tendered in performance of an exchange contract should be seasonably made, and the party tendering it should be given an opportunity to remedy the defects. Defects in the title offered may be waived.

Objections to a deed offered in performance of a contract for exchange of property should be seasonably made.⁸⁷ However, where there is an apparent encumbrance of record, the party to whom the land is offered is entitled to demand a reasonable time for investigation.⁸⁸

Ordinarily a party should make all his objections to the title disclosed by the abstract furnished him by the other party when he returns such abstract,⁸⁹ but a failure to do so may not be fatal.⁹⁰

Bond conditioned on conveyance by surety

Where plaintiff agreed to convey his land in Colorado to defendant, and defendant agreed to deliver to plaintiff a bond of a surety company, in which this company obligated itself to convey land in Mexico to plaintiff, defendant's delivery of such a bond constituted a full performance, and the fact that lawless conditions in Mexico made it impossible to deliver a good title to the Mexican land was of no avail to plaintiff in an action against defendant for the value of the Mexican land.—Bowe v. Wright, C.C.A. Colo., 281 F. 946.

A party who is aware of alleged defects in the title of the other party should notify the other party before refusing to carry out the agreement in order that the title may be cleared, if possible.⁹¹ However, it seems that the application of this rule is less strict in the case of an agreement to furnish a deed with an abstract of a perfect title.⁹² A party is usually entitled to a reasonable time to meet the objections of the other party to the title to land which the former offers on the exchange.⁹³

A contract providing fully for the manner and time in which objections to the title tendered should be presented is binding as respects the right of the party tendering title to specific performance.⁹⁴

Waiver and estoppel. A party may waive defects in the title of the other party to real property involved,⁹⁵ as by failing to raise an objection⁹⁶ or seasonably to do so.⁹⁷ Taking and retaining possession of the land after knowledge of a defect in the title may constitute a waiver of such defect.⁹⁸ However, where a party takes possession of the real estate which is to be conveyed to him, before the deed is executed, he is not thereby precluded from requiring a deed in accordance with the contract.⁹⁹

As a general rule, retention of an abstract by the party to whom it is delivered for an unreasonable time without objection constitutes a waiver of defects shown by the abstract.¹ The making of specific objections to alleged defects in an abstract or deed may be deemed a waiver of others not mentioned.² However, a party is not estopped to object to a defect in the title of the other party on the ground that he has already objected to the title because of another defect where at no time has there been a definite rejection of the title

based on such other defect.³ It has been held that the act of one party in accepting an abstract believing that the time had expired in which the other party could require him to accept was not a waiver of a requirement that it show clear title.⁴

c. Delivery and Acceptance of Property

Full performance of a contract for the exchange of personal property requires delivery and acceptance of the property to be transferred. Delivery may be symbolic.

The mere fact that the contract recites that one of the parties acknowledges payment for certain articles and thereby delivers all thereof to the other party does not show that there was an actual delivery.⁵ There may be a symbolic delivery of personal property involved in an exchange.⁶

Acceptance and inspection. Performance by a party to a contract for the exchange of personal property is not complete until the goods tendered are accepted by the other party.⁷ In order to hold a party to an implied acceptance of personal property which is to be delivered in exchange for other personal property, knowledge on his part that the tender was made or the delivery attempted must be shown,⁸ unless there are peculiar and special circumstances or an established custom under or by which the party to whom delivery is to be made is bound to possess such knowledge.⁹ Loss of property agreed to be exchanged has been held not a sufficient excuse for a refusal to accept the property tendered by the other party.¹⁰

Opportunity to inspect must be given the party to whom a tender of personal property is made; otherwise he will not be charged with a wrongful rejection.¹¹ On an exchange for goods which are to be exchanged at the invoice value, the party

§ 13. Conditional Exchange

General principles governing conditional sales are applicable to conditional exchanges.

General principles governing conditional sales of personal property, considered in the C.J.S. title Sales § 553 et seq, also 55 C.J. p 1192 note 2 et seq, are applicable to conditional exchanges in which a party delivers possession of property to another while retaining title until he receives payment in other property in accordance with the terms of the contract.¹³

a. Right of Action

- (1) In general
- (2) Form of action
- (3) Failure of title to real property
- (4) Deficiency or excess in quantity

(1) In General

Depending on the facts of the particular case, a party to an exchange contract may have a right of action to recover the value of property transferred, or a right of action for damages, or he may sue for specific performance.

Where one of the parties has fully performed the contract by conveying or delivering the thing which he agreed to give in exchange, and the other party fails to perform,¹⁴ or where neither party has performed and one of them, on being called on to perform, fails or refuses to comply with his contract,¹⁵ the party who is not in default but is ready and willing to perform¹⁶ may maintain an action for

13. Remedies of seller

(1) Where the transfer of personal property by one of the parties is in the nature of a conditional sale, he must comply with the requirements of the statute applicable in order to enforce his right to retake the property transferred by him.—Dougherty v. Neville, 95 N.Y.S. 806, 108 App.Div. 39, affirmed 79 N.E. 1103, 186 N.Y. 578.

(2) Where a contract was made to exchange a beet pulp drier for products to be manufactured thereby, defendant having refused to deliver such products to complainant, the latter, having retained title to the drier until paid for, was entitled to sue at law to recover possession thereof and damages for defendant's breach of contract, or for the balance of the price unpaid in money.—Sugar Beets Product Co. v. Lyons Beet Sugar Refining Co., C.C.N.Y., 161 F. 215.

23 C.J. p 227 note 15.

Acquiescence to rescission

Where plaintiff acquiesced in defendant's rescission of an exchange contract, it was held that he was not entitled to recover damages.—Reader v. Frank H. Applegate, Inc., 271 N.W. 839, 224 Wis. 574.

Proximate cause

Plaintiff's breach of contract to reduce first mortgage from thirty three thousand dollars to twenty seven thousand dollars on her farm, which she exchanged for defendant's land, which was subject to mortgages aggregating forty four thousand dollars, was not proximate cause of loss of farm to defendant by foreclosure, so as to entitle defendant to the damages claimed for the loss thereof.—Tulburt v. Hourscht, 248 N.W. 192, 61 S.D. 231.

15. Ky.—Linde v. Ellis, 6 S.W.2d 1089, 1090, 224 Ky. 649, citing Corpus Juris.

16. Cal.—Barnhart v. Blackburn, 30 P.2d 424, 426, 137 Cal.App. 240, citing Corpus Juris.

Both parties in default

Where a party to an executory contract for the exchange of realty executes a note for two thousand dollars conditioned to be void on performance of the contract, it is a good defense, in an action on such note, that plaintiff has likewise defaulted by failure to deliver an abstract showing marketable title as called for by the contract.—Crandall

v. Jacobs, 190 N.W. 379, 195 Iowa 296.

Party breaching contract

(1) Plaintiff could not recover damages under contract to exchange property if she breached contract herself or was party to defendant's breach thereof.—Bayer v. Gage, 168 N.E. 749, 33 Ohio App. 108.

(2) Where defendant was sued for specific performance of a contract to exchange realty and defended against the action and cross-petitioned for damages, and evidence showed that defendant first breached the contract, trial court was authorized in denying defendant damages.—Johnson v. Powers, Okl., 111 P.2d 191.

Liquidated damages

(1) Party to contract for exchange of property had option to treat contract as ended or to bring action for liquidated damages provided therein when other party without qualification renounced contract and refused to perform thereunder.—Kocsis v. Wroblewski, 196 N.E. 367, 100 Ind. App. 653.

(2) Party defaulting was liable to other parties for liquidated damages, notwithstanding impossibility of performance known to broker employed by all.—Green v. Kaempf, 212 N.W. 405, 192 Wis. 635.

Contract not specifically enforceable

Party to exchange of property was entitled to full performance by other party, who had received all benefits thereunder, or reimbursement for deficiency, regardless of insuff-

damages for the breach of contract against the party who fails or refuses to perform, or in a proper case may sue for specific performance as shown in the C.J.S. title Specific Performance § 63, also 58 C.J. p 1025 notes 63-68, but there can be no action at law for the consideration agreed to be exchanged.¹⁷

A party not in default who rescinds the contract may recover the specific property with which he has parted¹⁸ or the value thereof.¹⁹ However, a suit to recover property transferred to defendant, who breached the contract, is a waiver of the right to sue for damages for the breach.²⁰ Where the title to personal property which was to have been transferred to plaintiff in exchange for other property has passed to plaintiff, he may maintain an action to recover such personal property²¹ or its value;²² but where the contract is wholly executory, neither party having obtained possession of the property which was to have been transferred to him, an action to recover the property to be so transferred will not lie;²³ and a like rule applies with respect to the recovery of personal property which under the contract is to be exchanged for real property.²⁴

Boot money. Boot money as part of the consideration of an exchange of property may be considered as part of the purchase price with respect to which the parties may avail themselves of the usual remedies.²⁵ However, a party may lose his right to claim the balance of boot money from the other party by the method of dealing with the latter and their common agent.²⁶

Defenses. In an action on a contract for the exchange of property, defendant may set up any defense he has relating thereto,²⁷ unless estopped.²⁸

On defendant's admission of the only reason for not carrying out the exchange, all other inconsistent defenses become immaterial.²⁹

In a proper case fraud may be set up as a defense³⁰ or as a basis of claim for damages by way of recoupment, set-off, or counterclaim³¹ in an action for breach of contract for the exchange of property. Fraud with respect to a separate and independent contract may not be relied on as a defense to an action on the contract.³² It has been held that, where a counterclaim based on an alleged fraud which did not render the contract void in its inception is withdrawn, defendant cannot thereafter rely on the alleged fraud as a defense to an action on the contract.³³ In an action to recover personal property which was to have been transferred to plaintiff in exchange for certain real property, defendant may set up a defense of fraud where the contract is not under seal.³⁴

Time to sue. A party, having effected rescission, need not sue to recover his loss before expiration of the time within which he would be required to rescind,³⁵ and conversely, where defendant's acts amount to a refusal to perform, plaintiff may sue without waiting for the expiration of the contract.³⁶

(2) Form of Action

An action for breach of an exchange contract should be on the agreement and for breach of it and ordinarily should not be brought on the common counts for goods sold and delivered.

In general where goods are sold to be paid for wholly or in part by other goods the action must be on the agreement and for breach of it,³⁷ and not on the common counts for goods sold and delivered.³⁸ A like rule has been held to apply where defendant agrees to convey real property in exciency of contract to support specific performance.—Jacks v. Manning, Tex.Civ.App., 297 S.W. 588.

change for goods delivered to him and there is nothing to show that the property involved was priced at its cash value;³⁹ but an action for goods sold and delivered has been permitted on defendant's failure to transfer property in exchange where the price of the goods delivered is fixed by the contract.⁴⁰ A like rule has been held to apply where there is a mere reservation on the part of defendant of a privilege to make payment in goods.⁴¹ Where one of the parties has departed from the special contract by bringing an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, the other party has been permitted subsequently to recover in such an action for the goods delivered by him.⁴²

It seems that a person who has delivered goods pursuant to a contract by which he was to receive therefor certain real property may, on the other party's refusal to convey, rescind the contract and recover in assumpsit the actual value of the property delivered.⁴³ Where in the case of an agreement for the exchange of real property defendant's contract is enforceable, plaintiff should plead the special contract and defendant's failure to perform pursuant thereto,⁴⁴ and in such case there can be no recovery under the common counts where the contract is wholly executory.⁴⁵ So the person who conveys land in exchange for personal property to be transferred to him should usually plead the special contract.⁴⁶ Where defendant's promise to convey land is void and unenforceable, on his refusal to convey there arises an implied promise to pay for what he has received under the contract, and plaintiff can recover in an action of assumpsit the value of the property transferred by him.⁴⁷ An action to recover the difference in value arising on an oral contract for the exchange of lands should not be based on the oral agreement, but on the exchange as executed.⁴⁸

One entitled to rentals after an exchange can maintain an action for money had and received, notwithstanding an agreement entitling him to such rentals.⁴⁹

An action to recover a stipulated sum on failure of defendant to make title has been held not one to enforce a forfeiture or to recover a penalty.⁵⁰

Trover. A party to a contract of exchange to whom title in the property which was to be delivered to him has passed may maintain trover where the other party refuses to make delivery.⁵¹ So, also, trover may lie to recover personal property delivered by plaintiff to defendant and converted by the latter, where plaintiff may and does rescind the contract.⁵²

(3) Failure of Title to Real Property

On a technical exchange of real property, a party may, on the failure of title, make a reëntry on the land given by him in exchange.

Where the contract has been executed and deeds exchanged and the transaction is not a technical exchange, there is no right of reëntry on the land conveyed by the injured party,⁵³ and his remedy is an action for damages on the covenants or warranty in the deed.⁵⁴ However, where the contract is still executory, the injured party may sue for damages for a breach of the contract,⁵⁵ or he may recover the property transferred,⁵⁶ or its value,⁵⁷ in an appropriate action for that purpose.

Questions as to the right to maintain an equitable action for cancellation because of failure of title are treated in Cancellation of Instruments.

Suit by agent

A party to an indenture for the exchange of lands is not prevented from recovering on the covenants therein by the mere fact that the indenture recites that he is to receive possession of the other party's land as agent for a specified third person.—Couch v. Ingersoll, 2 Pick., Mass., 292.

In case of a technical exchange of land there is as incident thereto a warranty of title, and either party may, on the failure of the title to the property received by him, make a reëntury on the land given by him in exchange.⁵⁸ Under the technical rules of the common law, the injured party was given the right to vouch and recover over in value.⁵⁹ Only the parties to the exchange or their heirs may vouch by force of the warranty; therefore an assignee of one of the parties can neither reënter nor vouch, but a party to the exchange may reënter, although the land conveyed by him has been transferred by the other party.⁶⁰

The foregoing rules do not apply to an exchange of chattels.⁶¹

(4) Deficiency or Excess in Quantity

Where quantity is material, a party is entitled to relief for a deficiency in quantity of the property conveyed to him.

Where an exchange is made without reference to the number of acres and the value received by each party is substantially equal, there can be no recovery for shortage,⁶² but where it appears that the quantity is material, a party to the contract has been permitted to recover as for breach of contract for a deficiency in the quantity of land conveyed to him.⁶³ A party is not entitled to recover for an alleged excess in the quantity of the land conveyed where it appears that in making the exchange he joined with his coöwner in a deed to the other party to the exchange and that he is liable on the joint warranty for a deficiency, although his agreement with the other party to the exchange was for a transfer of his several interests.⁶⁴ There can be no recovery based on the alleged fact that a portion of the goods transferred by the party seeking a recovery in exchange for certain lands was omitted from the invoice of such goods where the evidence does not authorize a finding that there was such an omission.⁶⁵ Where there is an agreement to exchange one class of goods for another class, one of the parties is not entitled to recover from the other the value of goods delivered in excess of the value of the goods received without proof of a breach of the agreement on the other's part by a refusal to deliver goods to the extent of the value of the goods delivered to such other.⁶⁶

Mistake. Where there is a mutual mistake concerning the number of acres to be conveyed, the injured party may obtain relief either at law⁶⁷ or in equity.⁶⁸ It seems that in order to obtain relief because of a mistake as to the quantity of the property conveyed the injured party must on discovery of the deficiency give prompt notice to the other party to the contract and demand a correction.⁶⁹ A party who knowingly transfers more than a specified number of acres is not entitled to recover the value of the excess over such number on the ground of mistake.⁷⁰

Excess on sale of exchanged property. Where a contract requires one party to sell to a third person property which such party receives in exchange and account for the price received in excess of a certain amount, and such party elects in making the sale to take property in exchange for part of the price, he must account therefor at the value at which he agrees with such third person to take it.⁷¹

Set-off of notes. Where certain notes given by a party to an exchange of land constitute a part of the consideration, such notes are subject to set-off for a deficiency in the land conveyed to the maker of the notes.⁷²

The complaint should allege a performance by plaintiff or readiness and willingness to perform,⁸⁰ including the performance by him of conditions precedent,⁸¹ or an excuse for nonperformance.⁸² However, in the case of independent covenants, plaintiff may declare for a breach without taking notice of his own covenants.⁸³ The provision of the contract with respect to which a breach is claimed should be alleged in the complaint,⁸⁴ and the nature and character of the breach should be defined and specified.⁸⁵ The complaint should contain a claim for damages sought to be recovered,⁸⁶

as well as a statement of facts on which such damages may be predicated.⁸⁷

In trover for conversion of property transferred by plaintiff only the ultimate facts constituting the cause of action need be alleged,⁸⁸ and plaintiff need not allege the facts on which his right to rescind is based.⁸⁹

In an action for boot money the complaint need not allege that the goods transferred by plaintiff to defendant were of the kind and quality contracted for, or that they were free from liens.⁹⁰ The complaint in an action setting forth a special agreement for the exchange of personal property and the nonpayment of boot money is sufficient where the nonpayment is averred generally with no particular statement of the manner and periods of payment, where such boot money is due.⁹¹

legation in the petition is not denied, it stands as an admitted fact in the cause and requires no testimony to support it.⁹³ The evidence offered should be material to the issues raised by the pleadings,⁹⁴ and a material variance is fatal.⁹⁵ Thus, an averment of a contract of sale is not supported by proof of an exchange,⁹⁶ and an allegation of full performance is not supported by proof of an unpleaded waiver of performance.⁹⁷ Under a complaint framed on the theory that plaintiff has rescinded a contract for the exchange of real property and is entitled to recover the value of the land conveyed by him, he is not entitled to recover damages as for a breach of the contract.⁹⁸

c. Evidence

The rules of evidence applicable in civil actions generally are controlling in actions for breach of a contract for the exchange of property.

In accordance with general rules, plaintiff must prove the facts on which his right to recover depends.⁹⁹ In an action for breach of contract defendant has the burden of proving an affirmative defense,¹ such as mistake² or fraud.³ Defendant has also the burden of proving the averments of his counterclaim.⁴

General rules are applicable with respect to presumptions in actions on exchange contracts,⁵ and fraud will not be presumed.⁶

The general rules as to admissibility of evidence apply in actions based on a breach of such contracts,⁷ and all competent evidence is admissible, under proper pleadings, to establish the cause of action⁸ or defense,⁹ or to disprove matters relied on as a defense.¹⁰

The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence are applicable in actions based on non-performance of contracts for the exchange of property.¹¹

Questions of law are for the court, but questions of fact arising on conflicting evidence are for the jury. In accordance with general rules, instructions should be correct, warranted by the evidence, and should not be misleading.

what constitutes a reasonable time for performance,²⁰ whether time is of the essence of the contract,²¹ or whether plaintiff has furnished or offered to furnish reasonably satisfactory evidence of the cost of the goods to be exchanged by him for other property.²² However, in an action for damages, a directed verdict for defendant is warranted under evidence showing a mutual abandonment of the contract.²³

Instructions. The rules governing instructions generally are applicable in actions based on a failure to perform a contract for the exchange of property.²⁴ The instructions should not be misleading,²⁵ and correct instructions requested by a party and warranted by the evidence should be given,²⁶ but an instruction which is not based on the evidence should not be given.²⁷ An instruction should be considered with reference to the issue to which it relates.²⁸

Verdicts, findings, and judgment. General rules as to verdicts, findings, and judgments apply in actions based on a breach of a contract for the exchange of property.²⁹ In decreeing rescission, the court may properly take into account the disbursements, benefits, and the like, so as to restore the status quo;³⁰ and a defendant cannot question the ability of plaintiff to restore the property where the judgment was rendered in the alternative.³¹

e. Damages

- (1) In general
- (2) On failure of title to realty

(1) In General

On breach of a contract for an exchange of property, the damages recoverable are such as are the natural, direct, and proximate result of the breach, and different rules, depending on the extent of performance of the contract, have been applied in determining the amount of damages.

In an action for a breach of a contract for an exchange of property, the damages recoverable are such as are the natural, direct, and proximate result of the breach,³² and such as reasonably might be presumed to have been within the contemplation of the parties.³³ The rule as to damages may

Rescission or damages

In suit to rescind exchange of realty, chancellor could, without granting rescission, allow plaintiff three hundred dollars, representing excess of street assessment on property obtained above amount represented.—Jobe v. Brown, 53 S.W.2d 532, 245 Ky. 260.

Foreclosure of mortgage could not be awarded in an action to rescind a trade for deceit.—Campbell v. Jones, Tex.Civ.App., 230 S.W. 710.

Judgments or orders held proper

(2) Where decree provided for rescission of exchange of properties unless defendants brought up to date payments required by mortgage on property traded in by defendants, which defendants had agreed to pay, and filed statement of mortgagee showing payment of all arrears, mortgagee's statement that loan was in "good standing" was not compliance with decree; hence subsequent order providing for execution of rescission was authorized.—Weaver v. Failure to furnish abstract

Where defendant breached contract to furnish abstract, plaintiff's damages were held merely cost thereof, and not profits on sale lost through inability to furnish abstract.—Curtner v. Bank of Jonesboro, 299 S.W. 994, 175 Ark. 539.

Recovery of property and damages erroneous

Plaintiff is not entitled to recover money in addition to land in suit on quantum meruit for value of standing timber sold defendant, who agreed to convey such land to plaintiff.—Bay v. Bedwell, Mo.App., 21 S.W.2d 203.

Expense of protecting property

Vendor paying interest and taxes on land received in exchange for land sold, under implied contract for reimbursement, could not recover attorney fees expended to protect land.—Phipps v. Fuqua, Tex.Civ.App., 32 S.W.2d 660, error refused.

Failure to build railroad

Damages for breach of agreement to construct railroad on land exchanged were held difference in value with and without railroad at time of exchange.—Burroughs v. Southern Colonization Co., 173 N.E. 716, 96 Ind.App. 93.

be affected by the custom of dealing between the parties³⁴ or by special provisions of the contract,³⁵ as where values are agreed on, or fixed by, the parties.³⁶ As shown infra this section, in the application of the foregoing principles, different rules, depending on the extent of performance of the contract, have been applied in determining the amount of damages.

Where plaintiff has performed. Where plaintiff has fully performed, and defendant has not performed, the measure of damages has been held to be the value of the property which was to have been delivered to plaintiff,³⁷ and in such case the value at the time of the breach governs.³⁸ However, in some cases it has been held that where defendant has failed to convey in accordance with his agreement, the measure of damages is the value of the property conveyed by plaintiff,³⁹ at least where defendant is free from fraud.⁴⁰ In an action for property transferred by plaintiff in partial performance of the contract, the amount recoverable is the reasonable value of such property and not the price fixed in the contract;⁴¹ although in such case the price fixed in the contract as the value of the property delivered is prima facie evidence of their reasonable value.⁴² After rescission because of nonperformance by the other party, a party to a contract of exchange cannot recover the profits of his bargain.⁴³

Defendant not performing a contract to exchange lands, but entering into possession of plaintiff's land, has been held liable for rent, less a reasonable amount for any permanent improvements he has placed on such land.⁴⁴

Where defendant has only partially performed, it has been held that the measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the prop-

Attorney's fee

Real estate exchange contract, providing for payment of costs arising from enforcement thereof, including attorney's fee, by defaulting party, did not entitle party suing for forfeiture of contract to allowance of attorney's fee.—Leone v. Zuniga, 34 P.2d 699, 84 Utah 417.

Reconveyance

Where contract required plaintiff to reconvey defendant's property to him as soon as plaintiff had determined not to consummate the agreement of exchange, plaintiff's failure to reconvey did not entitle defendant to damages, where defendant did not prepare and present a deed for purposes of reconveyance.—Reilly v. Magee, 116 A. 310, 272 Pa. 406.

Partial performance by plaintiff

(1) One suing for breach of contract for exchange could recover only market value of property which he should have received, determined as of time and place of delivery fixed by contract, less balance to be paid therefor.

Value of land

In an action for the value of lands conveyed, after rescission for nonperformance, it is proper to permit a recovery of the difference between the price fixed in the contract on the land conveyed, less the amount of a mortgage thereon which the other party was to pay, and less also the amount of a mortgage thereon which the grantor has not paid pursuant to the contract and which has not been paid by the other party to the contract.—Nugent v. erty received by plaintiff and that given by him in exchange therefor,⁴⁵ and not the value of the property which defendant failed to transfer.⁴⁶ However, it has also been held that the measure of damages is the difference between the value of what was transferred to plaintiff and what should have been transferred.⁴⁷

Contract executory on both sides. Where one of the parties refuses to perform or puts it out of his power to perform, the other party may, if there is no default on his part, recover substantial damages,⁴⁸ but damages which are not within the contemplation of both parties at the time the contract is made, as a probable result of the breach, are not usually recoverable.⁴⁹ The measure of damages is the difference in value between the respective properties which are to be exchanged,⁵⁰ less any liens on such property.⁵¹ As a general rule the value at the time of the breach will govern,⁵² and the actual value and not the price named in the contract will govern where it appears that the price was specified merely for trading purposes,⁵³ but where property is to be taken on the exchange at a fixed price such price will be considered in determining the damages.⁵⁴

Expenses incurred. While on an exchange of property the right of recovery has been held to include certain expenses incurred by plaintiff in connection with the transaction,⁵⁵ it has been held that there can be no recovery for counsel's fees paid by

Boot money

Where defendant has failed to pay the specified boot money on an exchange of property, plaintiff is ordinarily entitled to recover the amount so specified.—Copeland v. Fowler, 66 S.E. 215, 151 N.C. 353—23 C.J. p 233 note 38.

Exchange on credit

Where property is sold at a price agreed on, on credit, to be paid for thereafter in other property at a fixed price, the amount recoverable is the balance of the purchase money for the property so sold, remaining unpaid, with interest thereon from the time payment was due.—Herrick v. Carter, 56 Barb., N.Y., 41.

Claim against third person

Where defendant has failed to transfer a claim against a third person pursuant to the contract which has otherwise been fully performed, the measure of damages is the value or amount of such claim and not the difference in value between the properties actually exchanged.—Thomas v. Dickinson, 12 N.Y. 364.

Breach of covenant to sell exchanged property

(1) The measure of damages for breach of a covenant in a contract for the exchange of real property, by which covenant the owner agrees to sell encumbered property, exchanged by him for unencumbered property, for at least a specified sum, is the difference between the value of the unencumbered land and the encumbered land over and above the encumbrances, provided such difference does not exceed such specified sum, and in the discretion of the jury interest on the sum found to be due, from a date not earlier than the commencement of the action.—Hartman v. Ruby, 16 App.D.C. 45.

(2) In an action for damages based on the failure of one party to the contract to produce a purchaser for a one-half interest in a stock of goods transferred by him in exchange for other property, at a certain price, the measure of damages is the difference between the price so specified and the market value of the one-half interest.—George v. plaintiff in a prior action by defendant for specific performance of such contract,⁵⁶ or for the expenses incurred by plaintiff in making an investigation in relation to the land which defendant agreed to convey,⁵⁷ or for expenses incurred to procure an abstract of title to land which plaintiff agreed to transfer, where no question as to such expenses was raised in the pleadings.⁵⁸ Although it has been held that a commission paid to a broker is a proper element of damages,⁵⁹ at least where the contract provides for the payment of commissions,⁶⁰ it has also been held that a commission paid to a broker cannot be recovered where such expense was not within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was made.⁶¹

(2) On Failure of Title to Realty

The measure of damages in an action based on a failure of title to land conveyed to plaintiff is the value of such land at the time of the conveyance.

The measure of damages in an action based on a failure of title to land conveyed to plaintiff is the value of such land at the time of the conveyance⁶² with legal interest on that sum.⁶³ On a rescission by plaintiff because of defendant's failure to make good title to land which was to be transferred by the latter, plaintiff is entitled to recover the fair or reasonable market value of the personal property transferred by him pursuant to the contract.⁶⁴

(3) On Deficiency or Excess of Quantity

In an action for deficiency in property received in an exchange, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the property given and that actually received in exchange at the time of the exchange.

In an action for deficiency in property received in an exchange, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the property given and that actually received in exchange at the time of the exchange.⁶⁵ Proof of the value of the land to be conveyed to the party making claim for a deficiency has been required in order to warrant a recovery,⁶⁶ and in the absence of a finding as to value of the respective properties the court cannot render a proper judgment.⁶⁷ Compensation has been allowed for the number of acres representing the shortage at a rate per acre equal to the actual value per acre of the parcel in which the deficiency occurred.⁶⁸ In case of a deficiency in the quantity of land which is transferred to plaintiff in exchange for other property the amount recoverable is governed by the actual value of the land where it appears that the price named in the contract was fixed merely for trading purposes.⁶⁹

fraud or concealment of facts is an action for damages,⁷² and that an action to recover the property given in exchange will not lie.⁷³ After rescinding an exchange for breach of warranty as to personal property received by him, the injured party may recover in an action at law the property given by him in exchange where the warranty is as to quality or fitness, or title.⁷⁴ The injured party may in a proper case maintain an action for the value of the property transferred by him.⁷⁵

On rescinding the contract for a breach of warranty, the same conflict as to the availability of remedies exists in exchange cases as in analogous cases of sales of personal property.⁷⁶ After rescission for breach of warranty the property transferred may be recovered in an action of replevin,⁷⁷ detinue,⁷⁸ or trover.⁷⁹

Election of remedy. The remedies by rescission and by action on the warranty are inconsistent, and an election to pursue one of the remedies prevents the party making such election from pursuing the other. Where a party vested with such election does some decisive act evincing his choice, he cannot recede from the position taken by him, with some exceptions in the case of mistake or ignorance of the material facts.⁸⁰

Defenses. The honesty of intention of the person giving the warranty is not a defense to an action based on a breach of warranty. Whether or not the warrantor knew that his statements as to quality were untrue is immaterial.⁸¹ The right of action for a breach of warranty of title is not lost by a failure to purchase an outstanding hostile title.⁸² In an action based on a warranty to the effect that the note of a third person offered in exchange for other property is a first lien on certain real property, the fact that the note is not due when judgment is entered in the action on the warranty is no bar to recovery, and the fact that plaintiff has pledged such note does not prevent a recovery by him.⁸³

A party to a contract for the exchange of personal property who receives property transferred to him with full knowledge that it has been stolen is not entitled to recover the property transferred by him.⁸⁴

Third person claiming property. In case of an alleged breach of warranty of title it has been held that an action to recover the property given on the exchange will not lie while an action by a third person is pending to recover the property received on the exchange.⁸⁵ An action for damages for breach of a warranty of title cannot be maintained on the ground that plaintiff has surrendered the property unless he shows that the property in question was taken from him by the judgment of a competent tribunal after notice was given to the warrantor as to the pendency of the action,⁸⁶ or that the right and title of the person who recovered the property is better than that of the warrantor.⁸⁷

b. Pleadings, Issues, and Evidence

General rules apply with respect to pleadings, issues, and evidence in actions based on a breach of warranty of property.

The general rules of pleading apply in actions based on a breach of warranty.⁸⁸ Where plaintiff relies on a representation which he alleges is a false warranty as to personal property, the action is founded on contract and the contract must be proved as laid. An allegation of a sale with warranty is not supported by proof of an exchange of personal property.⁸⁹ It is not necessary for plaintiff to prove fraud or deceit in an action based on a rescission of the contract.⁹⁰

erally apply in actions involving breaches of warranty, with respect to burden of proof,⁹¹ admissibility,⁹² and sufficiency.⁹³

c. Trial

The rules relating to instructions and questions of law and fact in civil actions generally are applicable in actions involving a breach of warranty.

The rules applicable to instructions in civil actions generally apply in actions involving a breach of warranty.⁹⁴

Questions of law and fact. The general rules determining whether a question is one of law or fact apply in cases involving a breach of warranty.⁹⁵

d. Damages

The damages recoverable on breach of a warranty are ordinarily such as are the natural and proximate result of the breach.

In an action for damages for breach of warranty plaintiff may recover such damages as are the natural and proximate result of the breach.⁹⁶ In case of an action for breach of warranty of quality or fitness the difference in actual value between the article as warranted and the article as delivered is the measure of damages, unless in exceptional cases of special damage,⁹⁷ and in such case the value of the property given in exchange for the warranted article is immaterial.⁹⁸ In the case of a warranty of fitness for a particular purpose a fair compensation for the loss incurred in attempting, in good faith, to use it for such purpose, may also be allowed.⁹⁹

For breach of warranty of title there is authority to the effect that the amount recoverable is the value of the chattel received by the injured party;¹ but it has also been held that the measure of damages is the amount of the consideration given by the injured party with interest.² The measure of damages in an action for damages based on a breach of warranty of title may be affected by special circumstances.³ It has been held that the costs paid in a proceeding to defend the title may be allowed in a proper case, but not the amount paid to an attorney for the defense of the prior action.⁴ However, it has been held that expenses incurred in the defense of an action of replevin brought for the property received on the exchange are not recoverable where the warrantor acted bona fide and without fraud.⁵

In an action for the recovery of property delivered by plaintiff, brought after a rescission for breach of warranty of quality, there can be no recovery in the absence of proof of the value of such property.⁶ Where there has been no rescission plaintiff is not entitled to recover the value of the property transferred by him in an action based on the existence of a chattel mortgage on the property received by him, in the absence of any evidence as to the value of other property covered by such mortgage.⁷

In action for breach of warranty of an engine and boiler traded to plaintiff, where plaintiff pleaded

a. In General

A party who has been defrauded in an exchange of property has an election as to several remedies, but an election of one ordinarily prevents him from pursuing another and inconsistent one.

Where there has been actual fraud in an exchange of property, the party defrauded has his election as to several courses of action that he may pursue.⁸ Thus he may rescind and maintain an action to recover the property which he has given in exchange,⁹ or its value,¹⁰ and where it develops in a suit for rescission that restitution in kind cannot be had the court is not divested of jurisdiction to proceed.¹¹ Another remedy open to the defrauded party is to affirm the exchange and institute an action for damages for the fraud which has been practiced upon him.¹² An action

Suit on warranty or recovery of property

Where there has been actual fraud mixed with deceit and corruption in an exchange of personality, the party defrauded has his election to sue on the warranty or bring his action for the property sold or exchanged by him.—Manship v. Newsome, supra.

Damages, rescission, etc.

Where defendant transferred land by way of exchange, the contract being induced by fraud and conspiracy, he may either affirm the contract and sue for damages for the deceit, or set up his damages, when sued on the contract, or he may rescind, and sue for damages caused by the fraud, or recover back anything paid under the contract, or resist an action at law brought against him on the contract, or a suit in equity for specific performance, or he may himself sue in equity to have the contract canceled and set aside.—Van Gilder v. Bullen, 74 S.E. 1059, 159 N.C. 291.

Assumpsit

Where a parcel of real estate is to be received in exchange for other real property at the price for which it can be purchased from a third person, an action of assumpsit to recover the difference between such purchase price and the amount for which the party who purchased it from such third person fraudulently stated to be the purchase price has been permitted.—*Jordan v. Fraud as to part of property

Where an exchange of properties is induced by fraudulent representations as to part of a number of parcels of property exchanged by one of the parties, the defrauded party has the same right to a rescission or damages as when fraudulent misrepresentations relate to all the property, and he may rescind, restore what he has received, and recover back what he has parted with, or retain what he has received and recover what he has lost, although an agreed price is placed on the property of the defrauded party and the property of the other party collectively.—Graf v. Holcombe, C.C.A. Neb., 277 F. 687.

Action in detinue held proper.—Cornett v. Brooks, 90 So. 787, 206 Ala. 566.

Replevin may be maintained to recover personal property given in exchange by the injured party.—Yonker v. Vaneer, 91 Pa.Super. 157—23 C.J. p 239 note 66 [b].

Where there was no testimony raising issue of conspiracy between corporation and building and loan association to perpetrate fraud on husband and wife so as to warrant rescission of contract whereby husband and wife promised to pay corporation two thousand five hundred and fifty dollars with interest at 6 per cent per annum, in addition to lots given in exchange, release by corporation of its eight hundred and fifty dollar note and lien securing note more than compensated for any damages sustained by reason of corporation's conveyance of realty to third person and his execution of note to association with which husband and wife were subsequently required to deal.—*Powell v. therefor.—Sonnesyn v. Aikin, 104 N.W. 1026, 14 N.D. 248.

N.J.—Maloran v. Calabrese, 135 A. 69, 100 N.J.Eq. 315.

Rescission improper

(1) Where the parties defrauded on an exchange of property elected to affirm the contract and sue for cancellation of a mortgage given by them, and defendants asked no affirmative relief, and the property previously owned by plaintiffs had passed through several hands, been neglected, and could not be returned in the same condition as at the time of the exchange, plaintiffs were entitled to relief in accordance with their election, and the court erred in decreeing a rescission and requiring them to amend to conform to that theory.—Vanek v. Soumar, 187 N.W. 396, 218 Mich. 282.

(2) Fair dealing required plaintiff suing to rescind contract for exchange of plaintiffs' burned dwelling house for defendants' apartment house to seek her remedy, if plaintiff was entitled to relief, in action for damages, where defendants had expended large sum of money in rebuilding burned dwelling house, and plaintiff, under judgment of rescission, would receive without consideration the benefit of such expenditures and the rent from the apartment house for six months and two hundred fifty dollars paid by mortgagee for transfer of apartment house property to mortgagee in lieu of foreclosure.—Goldman v. Sonntag, 15 N.Y.S.2d 407, 257 App.Div. 688, motion denied 20 N.Y.S.2d 415, in equity to recover the difference in the value of the property as represented to the defrauded party and its real value has also been permitted,¹³ and equity will, in a proper case, grant relief on the ground of fraud or misrepresentation as to the quantity of land to be conveyed.¹⁴ While an action to rescind an oral contract of exchange has been permitted,¹⁵ where there is a written contract it has been held that a party thereto cannot maintain an action of assumpsit based on an alleged prior oral contract on the ground that he was induced to enter into the transaction by fraudulent representations with respect to real property which was to be transferred to him on the exchange.¹⁶ Questions as to the right to a cancellation in equity of deeds or written agreements for fraud are treated in Cancellation of Instruments.

One defrauded in an exchange of properties must assert his remedial rights with diligence and without delay,¹⁷ but if the fraud is not known, or could not have been reasonably ascertained, no delay will defeat the right of action.¹⁸ Whether the facts constitute laches depends on the circumstances of each case.¹⁹ It has been held that the fraud of plaintiff is no defense to an action to recover, on a rescission for fraud, personal property

given in exchange for other personalty.²⁰

Effect of election of remedy. The remedies by rescission and by action for damages are inconsistent, and an election to pursue one of the remedies prevents the party who makes such election from pursuing the other.²¹ However, where a perfect rescission on the ground of fraud does not place the injured party in statu quo, as where he has suffered injury which the rescission and the remedies based thereon cannot repair, he may thereafter maintain an action of deceit.²²

Counterclaim. In a suit by the grantor to rescind a contract for exchange of property for fraud, the purchaser may deny the fraud and counterclaim for rents and profits lost by reason of plaintiff keeping him out of possession.²³

b. Pleading

The rules applicable in civil actions generally are applied to pleadings and issues, proof, and variance in actions based on fraud in contracts for exchange of property.

The rules of pleading applicable generally in civil proceedings apply in an action to recover, after a rescission for fraud, property given on an exchange or its value,²⁴ and in an action to recover

Want of equity

Where suit in equity by party to an exchange of property to secure money judgment against other party for fraud and to cancel a note, made a charge on the property transferred to complainant, and owned by such other party but held by a bank as collateral, must fail because of want of equity as against such party, it must fail also as to the bank, as its liability depends on establishing cause of action against such party.—Torbit v. Jaffee, 279 N.Y.S. 392, 244 App.Div. 344.

(3) There can be no recovery for a shortage in property conveyed on an exchange, on the ground of fraud or mutual mistake, where there is no evidence of the value of the land actually conveyed.—Rahl v. Compton, Tex.Civ.App., 112 S.W.2d 509, error dismissed—23 C.J. p 240 note 93 [b].

(4) In an action based on fraud to recover for a deficiency, plaintiff must show not only that there is a shortage, but also the number of acres within the established lines and boundaries of the property conveyed to him in order that a proper foundation may be laid for estimating his loss.—Billick v. Davidson, 162 N.W. 603, 178 Iowa 1153.

(5) In an action in equity to recover the difference in value between the invoice price of goods transferred by plaintiff and their actual value based on an alleged fraudulent scheme to reduce the invoice price on an appraisal, there can be no recovery in the absence of evidence of fraud in the selection of the appraisers or of the existence of a combination to reduce invoice price.—Harm v. Voss, Iowa, 82 N.W. 753.

General denial

In an action by a piano dealer to recover a balance due on an oral contract in exchange of pianos, general denial of the answer held sufficient for reception of testimony offered by defendants as to the entire history of the piano transactions.—Ruegnitz v. Harrington, Iowa, 183 N.W. 605.

Evidence not admissible

In an action to recover a horse exchanged for a mule, and damages for its detention, brought after a rescission for fraud, evidence as to value of use of mule by plaintiff after rescission has been held not admissible, where defendant did not file a plea to set off such use against plaintiff's damages for detention of the horse.—Smith v. Thomas, 78 So. 820, 201 Ala. 442.

Representation presumed innocently made

In action by one who had exchanged his city property and a sum of money for a farm, to recover a portion of the purchase price on the ground that the contract was induced by false representations as to the amount of land in the farm, there being no claim that such representation was in writing, or allegation that it was falsely or fraudulently made, the presumption would be indulged that it was innocently made.—Beckley v. Gilmore, 234 S.W. 459, 192 Ky. 744.

By virtue of statutory provision, fraud was presumed, where grantor in exchange misrepresented agricultural qualities of land.—Graham v. Apple, Tex.Civ.App., 287 S.W. 1107.

§ 1. Definitions, Kinds, and Purposes

An exchange is an association of persons engaged in business of the same nature to provide facilities for the transaction of their individual business. The principal purposes of an exchange are to provide a place and other facilities for the convenience of its members, and to maintain fair standards of business dealings.

An exchange is an association of persons engaged in business of the same nature who for convenience have combined to provide at the common expense and under uniform rules a common place for the transaction of their individual business.¹

The principal purposes and objects of an exchange are the affording to members of facilities for the transaction of their individual business and providing for a convenient exchange or salesroom for the transaction of such business and the maintenance of rectitude and honorable dealings with those members in their business transactions.² In some of the associations a declared purpose is to make provision for the widows and families of deceased members.³ It is not one of the functions of a stock exchange to hold property or to accumulate profits for the benefit of its members.⁴

§ 2. Nature, Status, and Incorporation or Organization

Some exchanges are unincorporated voluntary associations, distinguishable from partnerships, joint stock companies, or corporations although possessing some of the characteristics of those organizations. Other exchanges have assumed a corporate form of organization.

Many exchanges are unincorporated voluntary associations⁵ not organized in pursuance of any statute or legislative act,⁶ on which no special privileges are conferred by the state, and which owe no special duties to the public.⁷ Such exchanges are not partnerships,⁸ joint stock companies,⁹ or corporations,¹⁰ although possessing some of the characteristics of each of those types of organization,¹¹ such as association¹² and being governed by regulations adopted by themselves for that purpose.¹³ More specifically, unincorporated exchanges resemble partnerships with respect to the property rights of members, see infra § 5, are like corporations in that such exchanges may adopt constitutions and sets of by-laws which are binding on members, see infra § 3, and, like corporations, have a continued existence, unless voluntarily dissolved, and are unaffected by the death, resignation, suspension, or removal of members.¹⁴ The same rules of law and equity apply to such exchanges, so far as regards the control of them, and the adjudication of their reserved and inherent powers to regulate their conduct and to expel their members, as to corporations and joint stock companies.¹⁵

A number of important exchanges have moreover either taken advantage of general incorporation laws or secured special charters;¹⁶ but it has been held that an exchange, although incorporated, is a voluntary association.¹⁷ Unlike ordinary business corporations, these associations do not carry on business for pecuniary gain, see Corporations § 13, and, because the successful carrying out of the purposes for which produce exchanges and like associations are organized depends on the personal character and conduct of the members, they possess a power of suspending or expelling members which does not exist in ordinary business corporations, see infra § 7.

Approval by courts. In view of the worthy and beneficent aims of exchanges as stated in § 1, they are regarded by the courts with approval.¹⁸

Powers. Aside from certain inherent powers possessed by exchanges as such,¹⁹ an incorporated exchange, as in the case of corporations generally see Corporations § 935, derives its authority to

Corporate status as manager of pools

The status of an incorporated coal exchange, organized by railroads and coal shippers to facilitate the handling of coal at the seaboard, has been held to be merely that of a manager of a series of pools, the coal in which was owned by the members of each pool collectively, and not itself the owner of the coal.—Read v. act from the statute under which it is organized²⁰ and the charter issued thereunder.²¹

In the absence of restrictive provisions in the incorporating statute the mere use of a particular word in the corporate name of an exchange may not be permitted to operate as a limitation on the jurisdiction or powers of such exchange.²²

When subject to public regulation. Exchanges engaged in a business affecting a public interest are by virtue of that fact subject to reasonable regulation in the public interest,²³ being required to submit to such reasonable regulation as the state may see fit to impose in the exercise of its police power,²⁴ and particular regulatory statutes have been held constitutional.²⁵ Accordingly the rules, regulations, and methods of an exchange engaged in a business affecting a public interest are subject to regulation by the legislature.²⁶ For example, the rules of an exchange governing its conduct are subject to regulation with a view to preventing abuses and securing freedom from undue discrimination in its operations.²⁷ More specifically, an exchange engaged in business affecting a public interest may as a condition to its operation, see infra § 5 b, be required to admit certain persons to membership, precluded, see infra § 7, from suspending members for certain causes, and prohibited from enforcing a by-law forbidding members from dealing with nonmembers, see infra § 5 a.

§ 3. Constitution, By-Laws, and Rules

- a. In general
- b. Right to make rules and validity thereof
- c. Construction; retroactive operation
- d. Amendment
- e. Persons bound
- f. Interference by courts

a. In General

The constitution, by-laws, and rules of an exchange constitute a contract as between the members and also as between them and the exchange.

As in the case of associations generally, see Associations § 11 b, the constitution, rules, and by-laws of an exchange, organized as an association, constitute a contract both as between the members themselves and as between the exchange on one side and its members on the other,³⁰ and such contract must be interpreted like any other contract, and cannot be remade or altered by the court.³¹

The rules of an exchange do not establish a general custom or usage³² nor constitute a rule of evidence binding or controlling the courts.³³

b. Right to Make Rules and Validity Thereof

Except as affected by public regulation, an exchange has inherent power to make such rules as are necessary to enable it to carry out its purposes, provided such rules are not contrary to public policy or the law of the land and are not unreasonable or uncertain.

Subject to public regulation of the rules, regulations, and methods of an exchange, when it is engaged in a business affecting a public interest, see supra § 2, exchanges have inherent power to enact such rules and regulations concerning the government of their affairs as may be necessary to carry out their purposes.³⁴ To be valid and binding, however, the constitution and by-laws of an exchange must not contravene public policy or the law of the land,³⁵ or be unreasonable³⁶ or uncertain.³⁷ Rules must be adopted in accordance with the methods, if any, prescribed by the constitution or charter of the exchange,³⁸ and by-laws of incorporated exchanges must be within the scope of the powers conferred by their charter.³⁹ The mere fact that a by-law of an exchange differs from the common-law rule does not render such by-law invalid.⁴⁰

40. Mo.—Goddard v. Merchants' Exch., 9 Mo.App. 290, affirmed 78 Mo. 608.

The right and power of an exchange to make rules governing its members generally is discussed in § 5 infra.

Partial invalidity. The court cannot sustain a rule which is in part invalid, unless it is severable.⁴¹

c. Construction; Retroactive Operation

The usual rules of construction apply to the constitution, rules, and by-laws of exchanges. Exchange rules are not retroactive in operation.

The constitution, rules, and by-laws of an exchange should be given a reasonable construction,⁴² and should be construed not by the jury but by the court,⁴³ which will regard the substance of the whole matter⁴⁴ and disregard grammatical errors.⁴⁵ In a proper case resort may be had to practical construction by the parties concerned.⁴⁶ Penal provisions should be strictly construed.⁴⁷

In case of conflict between the constitution and the by-laws the constitution must prevail.⁴⁸

Exchange rules⁴⁹ and amendments thereof⁵⁰ are not retroactive in operation.

d. Amendment

The constitution and by-laws of exchanges may be amended.

The constitution and by-laws of an exchange are subject to amendment.⁵¹ The amendment, to be valid and effective, must be adopted in accordance with the organic law of the organization itself and its by-laws,⁵² and when so adopted is ordinarily binding on the member provided his vested property rights are not interfered with, see infra this section subdivision e (1). An amendment which deprives a nonmember of a substantial vested right is not binding on him, see infra this section subdivision e (2).

An amendment to the constitution in general terms will not be deemed to relate to a particular case only, where the ruling was at first applied in terms to that case, and afterward made general and inserted in the constitution.⁵³

e. Persons Bound

(1) Members

(2) Nonmembers

(1) Members

Members of an exchange are bound by the provisions of its regularly adopted constitution, rules, and by-laws.

In accordance with the rule that the constitution, by-laws, and rules of exchange constitute a contract between the exchange and its members, see supra this section subdivision a, one who becomes a member of an exchange submits himself to the operation of its constitution and by-laws, and agrees to be bound thereby, so far as they are valid and within its powers to make,⁵⁴ and is ordinarily bound by amendments to the constitution and by-laws regularly adopted,⁵⁵ provided they do not interfere with his vested property rights.⁵⁶ Moreover, members are presumed to know the rules of the exchange and to have assented to them.⁵⁷ Since members go in voluntarily, they cannot complain of an unnecessarily harsh rule or severe penalty which the majority in adopting have decided is in the interest of the body,⁵⁸ and it has been held that a member is estopped to deny the reasonableness of rules existing at the time of his admission.⁵⁹

Members are not, on the other hand, bound by invalid rules of the exchange or those beyond its power to make,⁶⁰ this being particularly true as regards rules made subsequent to the admission of such members,⁶¹ and a member is not bound by an exercise of power on the part of his fellow members to which he has not assented by becoming a member, or which is not derived from the law of the land.⁶²

(2) Nonmembers

Generally nonmembers of an exchange are not bound by its laws and customs.

It is generally held that persons who are not members of the exchange are not bound by its laws and customs,⁶³ unless they contract with reference to them,⁶⁴ although there exists authority to the effect that nonmembers are presumed to have dealt with the member with reference to rules and customs of the exchange.⁶⁵ At any rate non-members are not bound by an exchange resolution, rule, or custom of which they have no knowledge,⁶⁶ or which is contrary to the general rules of law.⁶⁷ Provision in a contract whereby a nonmember agrees to be bound by exchange regulations "and all the amendments that are made thereto" does not apply to amendments made subsequent to such contract.⁶⁸ A nonmember whose rights are merely derived from a member, such as his judgment creditor, is, like the member himself, see supra this section subdivision e, bound by the provisions of the exchange constitution, rules, and by-laws.⁶⁹ A nonmember who undertakes to exercise the rights of a member is bound by the rules and customs of the exchange by estoppel.⁷⁰ A nonmember is not bound by an amendment which operates to deprive him of a substantial vested right.⁷¹

f. Interference by Courts

The courts are not disposed to interfere with the enforcement of the constitution, rules, and regulations, and by-laws of an exchange but may under certain circumstances interfere to see that its rules are fairly and honestly administered.

The courts will not attempt to enforce the constitution, rules and regulations, and by-laws of an exchange,⁷² especially where they require acts contrary to law,⁷³ nor will they interfere to control their enforcement, if valid, but the exchange will be left to enforce them in the manner which it has prescribed.⁷⁴ There must be a fair and honest administration of the rules, however, and the courts will interfere to see that this is done.⁷⁵ The courts will apply a restraining hand where exchanges have acted fraudulently, capriciously, or in violation of their own laws,⁷⁶ or in accordance with rules contrary to law.⁷⁷ Unincorporated exchanges are within an act giving chancery jurisdiction to control unincorporated societies or associations.⁷⁸

§ 4. Officers and Agents

General rules as to corporations or associations are applicable as regards officers and agents of incorporated or incorporate exchanges respectively.

General rules relating to the officers and agents of Corporations, see Corporations §§ 715-932, 993-1087, or of Associations, see Associations §§ 19-21, are applicable to officers and agents of incorporated or unincorporated exchanges respectively.

Accordingly the board of directors or trustees of an incorporated exchange is, subject to limitation by constitution, statute, charter, or by-law, vested with the management of the ordinary affairs of the corporation including the management of its property.⁷⁹ Under appropriate rules of the exchange its executive committee may be authorized, on closing a member's account, to change his status from that of a member to a debtor of the exchange.⁸⁰

The acts of officers and agents of an exchange, when done within the scope of their authority, are binding on the exchange.⁸¹ An incorporated exchange is not, however, liable in tort for the acts of its officers and agents where they themselves are not individually liable.⁸² An exchange employing persons, not to conduct business on behalf of the exchange as agent for the members, but merely to afford facilities for the members to transact business with each other, is not liable for negligence of the employees, but only for negligence in employing them.⁸³

Officers of an incorporated exchange, exercising their discretion under their charter powers, are not liable for mere errors in judgment, resulting in damage to a member, in the absence of malice.⁸⁴ Officers who fail in their duty to resist enforcement of an alleged unconstitutional statute operating to injure the value of the exchange to its members and the pecuniary value of their membership may, however, be subject to suit in equity to prevent compliance with such statute.⁸⁵

§ 5. Membership

- a. In general
- b. Admission of members
- c. Rights of members

a. In General

The power of an exchange to make rules governing the rights and obligations of its members in contravention of the general law is limited to the field legitimately covered by the business of such exchange.

The inherent power of an exchange to make rules governing its affairs, see supra § 3 b, is, as regards rules governing the rights and obligations of its members in contravention of the general law, strictly limited to the field legitimately covered by the business of such exchange.⁸⁶ An exchange may prescribe the conditions on which the continuance of membership will depend;⁸⁷ and may properly make a rule forbidding its members from using exchange information in a certain manner.⁸⁸ On the other hand, under public regulations applicable to exchanges engaged in a business affecting a public interest an exchange may be prohibited from enforcing a by-law forbidding members from dealing with nonmembers.⁸⁹ However, under such regulations, members may be required to record in writing certain transactions,⁹⁰ or to make a report of business dealings to certain public officials and to permit inspection of such members' records,⁹¹ particularly when such requirements are only the legitimate means of enforcing statutory regulations within the power of the legislature.⁹² Moreover, members of an exchange engaged in a business affecting a public interest may be prohibited by public regulation from dealing in indemnities,⁹³ and from commingling funds of customers with funds of members or using a customer's funds to margin or guaranty the trade of another person.⁹⁴

General rules of estoppel apply to the claim of an individual that an exchange is estopped to deny his membership,⁹⁵ and to the claim that an individual is estopped to claim membership.⁹⁶

b. Admission of Members

Subject to applicable public regulations an exchange has power to make rules defining eligibility for membership and to prescribe the procedure for admission.

Subject to public regulations applicable to exchanges engaged in a business affecting a public interest, see supra § 2, an exchange, whether incorporated or not, has full power to make rules defining eligibility to membership in the association, and prescribing the mode to be followed by applicants for admission;⁹⁷ and the courts cannot compel the admission of an applicant who is ineligible

Purpose of prohibition

"It is apparent that the prohibition of dealings in indemnities was to prevent wide fluctuations resulting from wild forms of speculation. The evidence seems to support the view . . . that wide fluctuation due to such speculation is harmful and should be avoided. Likewise, that dealings in indemnities are promotive of speculations. Indemnities induce speculation and the latter promotes wide fluctuation."—Moore v. Object of prohibition or who has failed to comply with the prescribed mode in which membership can be gained.⁹⁸ Under such regulations, however, an exchange falling within their terms may be required to admit certain persons to membership.⁹⁹ Except as affected by such public regulations, rules relating to the admission of members, whether they appear to be reasonable or unreasonable, will not be interfered with by the courts so long as they are not immoral or hostile to the policy of the law.¹ Moreover, subject to such regulations, a seat can be acquired only by an election to membership in accordance with the constitution, or charter, and by-laws,² and the good standing of a prospective member may be investigated before admission.³ Assent to the constitution and by-laws by the applicant in the manner prescribed therein may be a condition of acquiring membership or a seat.⁴ Where an application for membership is improperly rejected, the applicant may, irrespective of statute, resort to the courts to determine his right, but prior to such determination he is not justified in going upon or remaining upon the premises of the exchange in violation of its rules.⁵

c. Rights of Members

- (1) In general
- (2) In property of exchange
- (3) In gratuity fund

(1) In General

The rights of exchange members are subject to its constitution, by-laws, and rules.

In accordance with the rule that the constitution, by-laws, and rules of an exchange constitute a contract binding on the member, see supra § 3 a, d, e, the rights of such member are subject to their provisions⁶ and a judgment creditor of the member has no greater rights than the member himself.⁷ A member is not estopped from relying on the constitution and by-laws merely because he has induced others in different matters to yield obedience to unauthorized orders of the board of directors.⁸ The rights and remedies of members with respect to the property of the exchange, and its gratuity fund, are discussed infra subdivisions (2) and (3) of this section, respectively; members' rights and remedies as regards other matters are considered under appropriate heads in subsequent sections, see infra §§ 7-9. Liability of exchange officers to suit by members for failure to observe duty to resist enforcement of statute is discussed supra § 4.

(2) In Property of Exchange

Subject to modification by constitution, rules, and by-laws of the exchange, the interest of each member in exchange property is equal.

Unless otherwise provided by the laws of the exchange, the interest of each member in the property of the exchange is equal,⁹ the rights of mem-

Separate corporation holding real estate

(1) Where a corporation is organized to hold real estate for an unincorporated exchange the property of such a corporation is in equity the property of the members of the exchange.—Clute v. Loveland, 9 P.

133, 68 Cal. 254—Hassey v. Ruggles, 156 P. 989, 30 Cal.App. 19.

(2) The membership of such corporation being the same as the membership of the exchange, its action with reference to the property and as to disposition of its proceeds is immaterial as affecting the rights of the members.—Hassey v. Ruggles, supra.

Stock exchange

(1) Notwithstanding it is not a function of stock exchanges to hold property or to accumulate profits for the benefit of their members, see supra § 1, such bodies possess more or less property as a necessary incident to their existence.—White v. Brownell, 2 Daly, N.Y. 329, 4 Abb.Pr., N.S., 162, affirming 3 Abb.Pr., N.S., 318.

(2) A member of such exchange has no severable proprietary interest in such property or a right to any proportional part of it upon withdrawing.—White v. Brownell, supra.

(3) He has merely the enjoyment and use of it while he is a member, and the property remains with, and belongs to, the body while it con-

bers in such property being similar to the rights of partners in partnership property,¹⁰ but since there is no stock issued to the members of an unincorporated exchange they cannot claim any rights to its property as stockholders.¹¹ The right or interest of a member in exchange property is, however, subject to applicable provisions of the constitution, rules, and by-laws of the exchange.¹² Such property or its proceeds may be distributed by agreement of the members,¹³ and this rule has been applied in determining the interest of a deceased member.¹⁴

(3) In Gratuity Fund

The rights of members or those claiming under them in a gratuity fund are, subject to constitutional and statutory provisions, determined largely by the exchange constitution, rules, and by-laws.

The rights and interests of members, or those claiming under them, in gratuity or benefit funds which have been established by some exchanges for the purpose of making payments to certain beneficiaries on the death of a member, and maintainable by members of the association by payment of dues and assessments,¹⁵ are, except as affected by applicable constitutional and statutory provisions, determined by the constitution, rules, and by-laws of the particular exchange considered.¹⁶ Payment from such fund is a mere gift from the surviving members of the exchange to the persons mentioned;¹⁷ a member has no severable, proprieties to exist, and when it ceases to exist the members become entitled to their proportional shares of its assets.—White v. Brownell, supra.

Coal

(1) Under the rules of a particular coal exchange, title to coal shipped by members and placed in the several pools did not pass to the exchange, but remained in the shippers as co-owners in proportion to their contributions.—New River Collieries Co. v. Snider, D.C.N.Y., 284 F. 287, affirmed, C.C.A., 286 F. 667.

(2) However, under a government order confiscating all coal shipped after it went into effect and providing that, when seized, coal should be treated as belonging to the consignor regardless of any previous passage of title, loss resulting from seizure of a shipment of coal by a particular member must be borne by him rather than by the exchange or shared by its other members.—Coyle v. Archibald McNeil & Sons Co., D.C.N.Y., 284 F. 298.

(3) Since the coal in the several pools is owned by the members of each pool collectively, the exchange has no right of action against a member for failure to restore in kind coal withdrawn from any particular pool until the closing of his account, when it is authorized to commute his obligation into a money debt to the exchange, and the amount of such debt is determined by the market price of the coal due at the time the account is closed.—Coyle v. Morrisdale Coal Co., D.C. N.Y., 284 F. 294, affirmed, C.C.A., 289 F. 429.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence

Amendment

(1) Under the text rule the rights of members in a gratuity fund are subject to regularly adopted amendments to the constitution, rules, or by-laws of the exchange.—Franklin v. Dick, supra—23 C.J. p 261 note 75 [c] (1), (2).

(2) Such rights are not, however, subject to an amendment to by-laws operating to impair vested rights in such fund.—Parish v. New York Produce Exch., 61 N.E. 977, 169 N.Y. 34, 56 L.R.A. 149—23 C.J. p 261 note 75 [c] (3).

Beneficiaries

(1) It is generally provided that on the death of a member a specified sum of money is payable out of the fund to such persons or objects as have been designated by the member, and certain parties are designated in the constitution to whom the sum is payable in case a member fails to make a designation. Continuation or transfer of membership

(1) As affecting rights in a gratuity fund the report of trustees as to continuation of membership until death is not conclusive on the courts.—Dillingham v. New York Cotton Exch., supra.

(2) Transfer of membership is not, however, shown by hypothecation thereof for debt exceeding value of such membership, where the member continued to exercise his privileges until death, and dues paid for him were charged against him.—Dillingham v. New York Cotton Exch., supra.

§ 6. — Dues, Fines, and Assessments

Members of an exchange may be required to pay dues, fines, and assessments.

A new member may be required to pay an initiation fee,²¹ or to sign an agreement to pay the fees and dues required by the constitution and by-laws,²² the extent of a member's liability under an agreement to pay "annual dues" as fixed by the board of directors being limited to the amount necessary to pay the current expenses incident to the purposes of the exchange.²³ A suspended member may, when the rules so provide, be required to pay annual dues as though in good standing.²⁴ The effect of failure to pay dues is determined by the laws of the exchange.²⁵ It is generally within the power of an exchange to provide for fines of members.²⁶ Storage charges by an exchange against its members have been held not to amount to a fine or penalty notwithstanding they are designated a penalty in the by-law under which they are imposed,²⁷ and notwithstanding the total amount of such charges is in excess of the amount of penalty allowed to be imposed by statute for violation of a by-law they do not, even when regarded as a penalty, violate such statute when based on a specified rate per day per unit of space used by the member charged.²⁸

a. Discipline of Members; Suspension or Expulsion

- (1) In general
- (2) Validity and construction of regulations or rules
- (3) Particular grounds or offenses
- (4) Prosecution of charges
- (5) Effect of suspension or expulsion

(1) In General

Subject to certain restrictions members of an exchange may be disciplined, fined, suspended, or expelled for their acts.

Subject to governing legislative restrictions on the power of exchanges, engaged in a business affecting a public interest, see supra § 2, and to the presumption against the power to expel a member since expulsion is in the nature of a forfeiture and not favored by the law,²⁹ to a limited extent an exchange has inherent power to fine, suspend, or expel a member for certain acts, although such power is not conferred by its charter or constitution.³⁰ So, in the absence of a contrary regulation an unincorporated exchange may expel a member by a vote of the majority,³¹ after he has been notified of the charge against him, and afforded an opportunity of being heard in his defense.³² The law will not, however, permit the exercise of indefinite powers of expulsion;³³ a member cannot arbitrarily be suspended or expelled on insufficient grounds or through the caprice of its officers or other members with no proof of conduct on his part in contravention of the charter or by-laws of the corporation;³⁴ and when the association possesses property, nothing but an express power in its charter or articles of association can authorize it to expel one of its members.³⁵ Moreover, a member may not be liable to suspension or expulsion for conduct not amounting to a violation of duty.³⁶

Under statutory regulations of exchanges engaged in a business affecting a public interest members may be suspended or expelled for certain conduct denounced as unlawful by the statute.³⁷ On the other hand under such regulations an exchange may be prohibited from suspending members for certain causes.³⁸ Particular public regulations in so far as they provide for the withholding of trading privileges from a member for certain causes have been held not retroactive in operation.³⁹

(2) Validity and Construction of Regulations or Rules

Subject to applicable public regulations rules relating to the discipline of members are governed by the exchange charter or constitution, statute, and public policy; and grounds for discipline, other than those within the inherent power of the exchange, are to be determined by a proper construction of its by-laws and rules.

Subject to public regulations, which may be controlling when the exchange is engaged in a business affecting a public interest, see supra § 2 subdivision (1) of this section, and infra this subdivision, the extent to which particular offenses may be made ground for discipline by specific rules must be consistent with, and may be controlled by, the charter, constitution, or by-laws of the exchange,⁴⁰ by the statute under which the exchange is organized,⁴¹ and by public policy.⁴² The exchange must not transcend the limits of natural justice, or violate its own rules.⁴³ Where the disciplinary power is conferred in general terms, it may be exercised only to accomplish the objects of the creation of the exchange.⁴⁴ A rule or by-law relating to the discipline of members must not be unreasonable,⁴⁵ and must be clear, definite, and certain.⁴⁶ Refusal to do business in violation of law cannot be made a ground for suspension.⁴⁷ The grounds for discipline other than those under the inherent power of the exchange, see supra subdivision (1) of this section are, ordinarily, to be determined by a proper construction of the by-laws and rules of the exchange.⁴⁸

Public regulations in the form of statutes governing the suspension or expulsion of members have been upheld.⁴⁹ The conduct of an exchange in suspending a coöperative association as a member for violation of an exchange rule forbidding rebates or refunds of commissions has been held improper, being in violation of a regulatory statute prohibiting exchanges from construing their rules so as to forbid cooperative associations from returning their profits to their members on a pro rata basis.⁵⁰

Strict construction. Regulations providing for forfeiture of membership, being penal in character, are to be strictly construed, and nothing taken by intentment or implication,⁵¹ this being particularly true as regards public regulations providing for expulsion for certain violations which may also subject one to punishment for crime.⁵²

Place affected or person concerned. Disciplinary regulations may be made applicable not only to conduct on the floor of the exchange and concerning the exchange or its members, but also to conduct on the part of members without regard to place or to the person concerned therein.⁵³ However, under a by-law referring to the "conduct" of a member, suspension of a member for acts committed by employees of his firm, without his knowledge and against his orders, is improper.⁵⁴ Proceeding on the theory that relations of a member with a person outside the exchange are outside the jurisdiction of an exchange committee empowered merely to hear disputes between members, it has been held that violation of the findings of such committee with respect to such relations cannot be made ground for expulsion.⁵⁵ The fact that a member has made contracts between customers may not prevent the exchange from expelling him, as such contracts can be enforced by the customers in their own names.⁵⁶

(3) Particular Grounds or Offenses

Various grounds or offenses may subject an exchange member to suspension or expulsion.

Particular grounds or offenses which may subject an exchange member to suspension or expulsion include such conduct as clearly violates the fundamental objects of the association as stated in one of its rules,⁵⁷ breach of contract,⁵⁸ failure to pay dues and assessments,⁵⁹ misconduct,⁶⁰ dishonorable⁶¹ or unmercantile⁶² conduct, circulation of false reports about an officer of the exchange,⁶³ making or reporting false or fictitious purchases or sales,⁶⁴ proceedings inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade,⁶⁵ acting in antagonism to power of exchange to establish just and equitable principles in trade,⁶⁶ running⁶⁷ or dealing with bucket shop,⁶⁸ violation of the charter

Security Exchange Act of 1934, by authorizing the securities and exchange commission to determine whether the protection of investors requires that an exchange member be suspended or expelled, is valid as providing sufficiently definite standards to guide the commission as against the contention that the statute constitutes an unlawful delegation of legislative powers.—Wright v. or by-laws,⁶⁹ refusal to submit to arbitration,⁷⁰ resorting to tribunals other than those of the exchange,⁷¹ fraud,⁷² insolvency,⁷³ and obtaining goods under false pretenses.⁷⁴

Under Securities Exchange Act. Under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 manipulation of security prices may constitute ground for suspension or expulsion of stock exchange members.⁷⁵

(4) Prosecution of Charges

- (a) In general
- (b) Nature of proceedings
- (c) Jurisdiction of tribunal and qualifications of its members
- (d) Preliminary proceedings
- (e) Hearing
- (f) Waiver of objections and laches

(a) In General

Disciplinary proceedings against a member of an exchange must be in strict compliance with its constitution and by-laws.

Proceedings to discipline a member must comply strictly with the constitution and the by-laws of the exchange;⁷⁶ but the exchange is not bound to act with the strict regularity which obtains in judicial proceedings.⁷⁷

(b) Nature of Proceedings

Disciplinary proceedings are judicial in their nature.

Proceedings to discipline members are judicial in their nature,⁷⁸ and the tribunal, when acting within the powers conferred on it in investigating charges of misconduct, constitutes a corporate court,⁷⁹ and it is declared that there is a strong analogy between the principles which govern in arbitration and those which relate to proceedings of this character.⁸⁰

(c) Jurisdiction of Tribunal and Qualifications of Its Members

Jurisdiction of disciplinary proceedings may, under charter or constitution of an exchange, be conferred on a body elected from exchange membership.

An exchange is generally authorized by its charter or constitution to delegate the power to try and punish offending members to a board of officers to be elected from its number,⁸¹ but not to a lay tribunal;⁸² and a statute giving the power in general terms to admit or expel members does not necessarily authorize a delegation of that power to the board of directors.⁸³ The tribunal may determine its own jurisdiction when the rules relating thereto reasonably admit of two constructions, but not otherwise.⁸⁴ Where a member refuses to comply with a valid contract on a false pretext, the board of managers has jurisdiction to determine whether such conduct is inconsistent with the charter and by-laws.⁸⁵ The properly designated tribunal or committee is not deprived of jurisdiction because a contract involved is unenforceable at law,⁸⁶ because the complaint against a member shows that the transaction in question is illegal,⁸⁷ or because accused attempted to transfer his membership without consent of the exchange.⁸⁸ That one has had business dealings with complainant is not sufficient to disqualify one as a member of the committee to try charges against another member of the exchange,⁸⁹ and it is held that a member may be tried by a tribunal one of whose members has preferred the charges.⁹⁰

(d) Preliminary Proceedings

Preliminary proceedings to determine whether charges shall be preferred against a member are sometimes provided for; accused is entitled to notice of the hearing at which charges against him are to be investigated.

The exchange may provide for a preliminary investigation as to whether charges shall be preferred. The member is not entitled to notice of such preliminary investigation.⁹¹ A person not a member of the exchange, if in its employ, may prefer charges against a member for a violation of its rules.⁹² So may a member of the exchange, although personally aggrieved by the alleged wrongdoing.⁹³ The specification of charges should fairly inform the member with what he is charged,⁹⁴ but it is not to be tested by the strict rules of criminal pleading, either as to sufficiency⁹⁵ or construction.⁹⁶

Notice to accused. An accused member is entitled to notice of the hearing at which the charges are to be investigated,⁹⁷ even though the rules of the exchange do not so provide.⁹⁸ Strict compliance with rules contained in the constitution and by-laws as to notice is essential,⁹⁹ but an evident error in the notice, which cannot mislead the member, does not render it insufficient.¹

Notice as to transfer of hearing see infra subdivision (e) of this section.

(e) Hearing

Unless he admits the existence of the ground for discipline, an accused member is entitled to a hearing on the merits, conducted in accordance with the charter or constitution and by-laws of the exchange.

An accused member is entitled to a hearing on the merits,² unless he admits the existence of the ground for discipline.³ He is not entitled to a trial conducted in accordance with the rules which govern the proceedings of courts, but only to the trial prescribed by the charter or constitution and by-laws of the exchange.⁴ Under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 it is discretionary with the commission, in proceedings to suspend or expel a member of a stock exchange, to order the hearings to be conducted where numerous witnesses and original records of market transactions are located,⁵ although error on the part of a trial examiner in failing to notify such member of a transfer of hearings from such place is not fatal where the evidence taken at the place to which the hearing has been transferred is merely cumulative and not indispensable to the finding of the commission.⁶ Proceedings under charges presented, notice given, and a hearing afforded are to be considered without too much regard to any technicalities.⁷ A constitutional provision securing the right of trial by jury does not apply to a proceeding taken by an exchange for the removal of a member for offenses against its constitution or by-laws.⁸

Counsel. A rule of the exchange denying the right of accused to professional counsel on the trial of charges against him is valid;⁹ but, in the

Reason for rule

Since the committee is appointed necessarily from the membership and the principal purpose of the exchange is to facilitate and encourage business transactions among members, were any other rule than the text rule to prevail any defaulting member might escape accountability to the exchange.—Moyse v. absence of such rule, an accused member may be entitled to be represented by counsel.¹⁰ The trial board also is entitled to counsel if the by-laws so provide.¹¹

Examination of witnesses. An accused member is entitled to examine his own witnesses and to cross-examine the prosecuting witnesses against him.¹²

Evidence. An exchange is not bound by strict rules of evidence in the trial of an offending member;¹³ nor is the commission, under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, bound by strict rules of evidence in proceedings to suspend or expel a member of a stock exchange for violation of the statute;¹⁴ such violation need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt,¹⁵ it being sufficient that there exist substantial evidence in support of a finding that such violation has occurred.¹⁶ Particular evidence before such commission has been held to be sufficient¹⁷ or insufficient¹⁸ to authorize findings in support of its order expelling an exchange member as provided by statute, or sufficient to authorize the opinion of the commission that action by that body was "necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors" as provided by statute.¹⁹

(f) Waiver of Objections and Laches

The right of an accused member to object to irregularities in disciplinary proceedings may be waived by him or lost by his laches.

An accused member may waive irregularities and the infraction of various rights by failing to take proper action at the trial with reference thereto,²⁰ or by laches.²¹

(g) Adjudication

The decision on disciplinary proceedings against exchange members must be within the jurisdiction of the tribunal making such decision.

The decision must be within the scope of the jurisdiction conferred on the tribunal of the exchange by the constitution or charter and by-laws.²² Sentence by a tribunal acting within the powers prescribed by the exchange is like an award made by a tribunal of the party's own choosing.²³ The order of expulsion authorized by the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 for unlawful conduct with respect to securities does not constitute a penalty or punishment for past offenses but is a remedial means of protection for investors.²⁴

On charges against a firm it is not necessary to convict or acquit the whole firm, but one member found guilty may be convicted.²⁵

Conclusiveness and finality. Where a member is expelled by proceedings in good faith in accordance with the lawful disciplinary regulations enacted in the charter, constitution, or by-laws of the association, the sentence of expulsion is final and conclusive.²⁶ A void adjudication of guilt is not a bar to a subsequent proceeding against the member for the same offense, however,²⁷ and a member on trial is not bound by the judgment if the investigation is not conducted in accordance with the charter and by-laws²⁸ or if the result reached by the triers is not within the legitimate field in which they are entitled to go.²⁹ commission in proceedings to suspend or expel a member of a stock exchange are conclusive when supported by substantial evidence.³⁰

(h) Review

A member may be entitled to a review of disciplinary proceedings.

A member is entitled to an appeal authorized by the constitution of the exchange, although the by-laws make the decision of the arbitration committee final.³¹ On petition for judicial review of an order of the securities and exchange commission expelling a member from exchanges, the court is without power to supervise the commission's discretionary determination that expulsion is necessary and appropriate for protection of investors,³² although, on finding by the court that the evidence is insufficient to support one of two findings by the commission, the court may reverse the order of expulsion and remand the case in order that the commission may determine in its discretion whether or not to modify its order of expulsion to one of suspension.³³ Judicial remedies open to stock exchange members are discussed infra § 8.

(5) Effect of Suspension or Expulsion

Expulsion not only terminates membership but destroys all rights incidental thereto; suspension, on the other hand, may not interfere with the member's vested rights or affect his financial interest in the exchange property.

An expulsion not only terminates the membership but destroys all rights incidental thereto.³⁴ A suspension in accordance with the by-laws is not, on the other hand, an interference with the offending member's vested rights of property where he has expressly agreed on entering the corporation to abide by its by-laws, and the suspension does not affect his financial interest in the property of the exchange,³⁵ nor may suspension of a member affect his liability to pay dues, see supra § 6. A contract of a client to reimburse a member for incidental losses, if he would suffer suspension, is valid, and damages may be recovered for its breach;³⁶ and customers of an expelled member can enforce their legal rights as against him.³⁷

Forfeiture as excusing nonperformance. The mere fact that performance by a member of his contractual obligations may result in forfeiture of his membership does not constitute an excuse for nonperformance.³⁸

b. Reinstatement

A member who has been wrongfully suspended or expelled may be entitled to be reinstated to membership.

A member of an exchange who has been wrongfully suspended or expelled may be entitled to be reinstated to membership,³⁹ and under certain circumstances may be entitled to the aid of the courts in enforcing his rights in this respect, see infra § 8.

Where an exchange is authorized to expel a member for certain conduct, it may properly impose certain conditions for reinstatement of such member after suspension.⁴⁰ Conditions precedent to equitable relief by reinstatement see infra § 8 c.

of the constitution, by-laws, and rules of an exchange, see supra § 3, and in consonance with the judicial attitude of noninterference in disputes arising out of dealings between exchange members, see infra § 10, the courts will not, as a general rule, interfere to control the enforcement of lawful disciplinary regulations.⁴¹ In the absence of fraud, imposition, or gross injustice, a member will not be heard to impeach in the courts the validity of proceedings against him, and the courts will not examine the merits of the controversy;⁴² but the association will be left to enforce its rules and regulations in the manner it has adopted for its own government.⁴³ Rules relating to the expulsion of members, whether they appear to be reasonable or unreasonable, will not be interfered with by the courts so long as they are not immoral or hostile to the policy of the law.⁴⁴ The law cannot restore a member who has been deprived of the privilege of membership for not complying with the conditions on which the enjoyment of it was made to depend.⁴⁵

The regularity of a proposed trial on charges against a member will not be inquired into by the courts.⁴⁶

Ordinarily the member must avail himself of the rights and remedies provided by the rules of the exchange before he can appeal to the courts for relief;⁴⁷ but this rule requires only that the member resort to such remedies as are provided by the exchange for review of its determination by appeal;⁴⁸ does not require resort to higher authority within the organization when it appears that such action would be futile;⁴⁹ and applies only where the proceedings are commenced and conducted in conformity with the constitution and by-laws.⁵⁰

b. Grounds for Interference

On behalf of a member who has been subjected to disciplinary action of an exchange, the courts may interfere to correct abuses in the administration of its rules and to determine whether its tribunals have acted within their jurisdiction.

The courts will entertain jurisdiction to correct abuses by inquiring into the regularity of the proceedings under the constitution and rules of the association for the purpose of holding the association to a fair administration of its rules;⁵¹ also whether the proceedings are within the jurisdiction of the tribunal,⁵² and a total absence of evidence to support a sentence of expulsion should have the same force as the absence of jurisdiction.⁵³ So the court will interfere to reinstate a member who has been unlawfully disciplined.⁵⁴ As to whether a member who has been suspended or expelled for violating a by-law which is against public policy is entitled to come into the courts for a decree reinstating him, the cases are in conflict. In some jurisdictions, it seems, a member is entitled to relief under these circumstances,⁵⁵ while in others it is held that his right to be restored to membership is vested in the contract between himself and the exchange, which

Reinstatement

Since an application, within the exchange, for reinstatement to membership would be merely a matter of grace and not a reversal of the exchange's determination whereby a member is suspended, and would not in any way involve a review of questions considered in such determination, under the text rule he is not required to make such application before resorting to the courts.—Lamborn v. he must accept in its entirety, and that so long as he insists on the rights of a member he cannot base any right of action on the illegal character of any of its by-laws.⁵⁶

c. Injunction

Ordinarily, disciplinary action by an exchange against its members is not subject to injunction, although an injunction may issue under certain conditions.

Ordinarily, the courts will not restrain the exchange from proceeding to a trial of an accused member. It cannot be assumed in advance that his trial will not be a fair one so as to justify the issuance of an injunction,⁵⁷ and ordinarily a court will not interfere in a contest between an exchange and a member thereof who has been suspended or expelled to grant an injunction against the enforcement of the judgment of the exchange.⁵⁸ It has been stated broadly that an expelled member cannot be reinstated by injunction, his remedy, if any, being at law;⁵⁹ but the better rule appears to be that a member may invoke the equitable power of the court by injunction to compel his restoration to the rights and privileges of membership where he is threatened with an unlawful suspension or expulsion under proceedings contrary to natural justice⁶⁰ and in violation of the constitution or by-laws of the association,⁶¹ or pursuant to an invalid rule.⁶²

Conditions precedent to relief. A member must do equity by performing or offering to perform his obligations to the exchange before he is entitled to equitable relief.⁶³ Accordingly, a member expelled for nonpayment of dues may, as a condition to relief by reinstatement, be required to show a tender of the amount due or an unsuccessful application on his part to ascertain such amount.⁶⁴ Right of exchange to require suspended members to comply with certain conditions for reinstatement by exchange see supra § 7 b.

d. Right of Action for Damages

A member may, in a proper case, sue the exchange for damages for his wrongful suspension or expulsion. In absence of bad faith or malice, however, a member, wrongfully suspended cannot sue the exchange or its members, or its officers.

A member of an exchange may in a proper case maintain an action against the association for damages for his wrongful suspension or expulsion.⁶⁵ In the absence of bad faith and malice, a member who has been wrongfully suspended cannot recover damages either from the exchange or its members,⁶⁶ or its officers;⁶⁷ nor can there be a recovery without a showing of damages.⁶⁸

e. Procedure

The procedure for enforcement of such judicial remedies as are available to members of an exchange is governed by general rules.

In alleging violation of the rules, the rules and the acts constituting the violation should be set out.⁶⁹

A court on an application for an injunction cannot review findings of fact of the directors of an exchange, unless the evidence adduced before the directors has been embodied in a bill of exceptions.⁷⁰

The issues before the court are limited by the scope of the pleadings.⁷¹ The courts will not review the evidence on which the exchange based its determination,⁷² further than to ascertain whether the case is so bare of evidence that no honest mind could have reached the conclusion arrived at by the exchange,⁷³ or unless there is no evidence tending to support the charge on which a member is disciplined.⁷⁴ The question is not

whether, passing on the evidence as res nova, the court would have reached the same conclusion as that of the exchange tribunal or whether the conclusion was reasonable or unreasonable,⁷⁵ but only whether the tribunal of the exchange had jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding, and, on the evidence presented to it, to adjudge the disfranchisement,⁷⁶ and whether the proceedings before that tribunal were regular.⁷⁷ The court cannot determine questions affecting the interests of persons not made parties to the proceedings before it.⁷⁸ There is a presumption that a decision expelling a member was founded on sufficient evidence, and in order to sustain the expulsion in the courts, the exchange is not bound to produce sufficient of the evidence on which its decision rests to show that the charges were sustained.⁷⁹ In an action for damages, where malice is not alleged, it should not be inferred, if the facts are open to an inference of good faith.⁸⁰ Where a member attacks the validity of the proceedings for his expulsion, the good faith in which they were conducted, and the justice of the action of the governing committee, and his averments are put in issue by the answer, the burden is on him to establish his averments.⁸¹ Where plaintiff claimed that his expulsion was due to passion and prejudice, the record of the evidence on which the committee on admissions acted in reporting his case to the governing committee is admissible to disprove such claim, although such record was not before the governing committee.⁸²

On examination before trial. A member is not entitled, on an examination of the president of the exchange before trial, to a production of evidence obtained by a special subcommittee on whose report the governing committee tried the member, unless the laws of the exchange required the charges served on the member to be accompanied by the information on which they were based.⁸³

§ 9. — Property in Seat or Membership, and Transfer Thereof

- a. Nature and status
- b. Voluntary transfer in general
- c. Pledge or assignment as security
- d. Seat of defaulting member
- e. Seat of deceased member

a. Nature and Status

"Seat" or "membership" in an exchange, sometimes used synonymously, represent the rights of the member in the exchange. A seat or membership in an exchange is usually regarded as a species of property.

The term "seat" in a stock or produce exchange is used as synonymous with "membership" in the association,⁸⁴ the seat representing the member's rights in the exchange.⁸⁵ A membership in an unincorporated exchange is the right to participate as a member in a voluntary private organization,⁸⁶ and may denote nothing more than the privilege of the individual elected as a member to engage in transactions on the floor of the place of business.⁸⁷ A seat or membership in an exchange is analogous, in some respects, to membership in a social club but is distinguishable from such membership;⁸⁸ is not a tangible thing;⁸⁹ and is not a franchise.⁹⁰

It is generally held that in a certain sense a seat or membership in an exchange is a species of property,⁹¹ although it has been stated that such seat or membership does not constitute property.⁹² At any rate, exchange membership, because of the valuable facilities it affords to the owner, possesses a pecuniary value,⁹³ and its value is capital invested in business.⁹⁴ A seat or membership in an exchange is not subject to absolute acquisition, ownership, or disposition,⁹⁵ but is acquired, held, and disposed of subject to the conditions and restrictions of the constitution and by-laws of the association,⁹⁶ is subject to the terms and conditions of the contract between the member and the exchange,⁹⁷ and may be subject to the police power of the state.⁹⁸ The status of membership in an exchange as property for particular purposes depends on the terms of the law involved. Excusing nonperformance of contract

Provision of an exchange constitution restricting membership to citizens may not constitute an excuse for nonperformance of a contract by an alien to purchase the seat of a member.—Levy v. Rosen, 21 N.E.2d 653, 300 Ill.App. 523.

Posting notice

(1) Rules requiring that notice of intention to transfer a seat be posted for a certain length of time are binding on the members.—Keyser v. Memphis Cotton Exch., 186 S.W. 593, 135 Tenn. 414.

(2) However, prior to action by the exchange board of directors on an application to transfer, such rules may not operate as a statute of limitations barring objections made after notice has been posted for the required length of time.—Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Johnson, Ill., 44 S.Ct. 232, 264 U.S. 1, 68 L.Ed. 533, reversing, C.C.A., 283 F. 374.

Repudiation of contract by purchase

On repudiation of the contract by one who has agreed to purchase the seat of a member, he is not required to do anything further, but is entitled to sue on the contract at once.—Levy v. Rosen, 21 N.E.2d 653, 300 Ill.App. 523.

Subordination agreements

(1) Under exchange rules one who proposes to buy the seat with funds advanced by another may be required to file with the exchange a subordination agreement whereby the lender agrees to subordinate his right to repayment, to the payment of claims arising out of the purchaser's membership in the exchange.—Bank of New York & Trust Co. v. Snedeker, 16 N.Y.S.2d 930, 173 Misc. 126, affirmed 13 N.Y.S.2d 278, 257 App.Div. 939.

(2) Such an agreement must be considered in its entirety in determining the purpose and object of the parties, and ambiguities should be resolved in favor of the lender and against the borrower.—Bank of New York & Trust Co. v. Snedeker, supra.

(3) Such agreement does not operate to cancel the indebtedness of the borrower to the lender who subsequent to the execution of such agreement advances money to purchase the seat.—McManus v. Biddison, 272 N.Y.S. 199, 153 Misc. 239, affirmed 271 N.Y.S. 1099, 242 App.Div. 623.

cannot be enforced as against the exchange.² The transfer is generally subject to the condition that the proposed transferee is elected to membership.³ A condition in an agreement to transfer a seat is effective as between the parties.⁴

c. Pledge or Assignment as Security

Except as precluded by the laws of the exchange a member thereof may assign or pledge his seat as security for a debt.

Except as precluded by the constitution or rules of the exchange⁵ a member may assign or pledge his seat as security for a debt;⁶ and a valid pledge may be created by delivery of certificate of membership without formal assignment of such certificate⁷ but the assignee or pledgee acquires only the rights of the assignor or pledgor subject to the rules of the exchange.⁸ The assignment need not be recorded.⁹ The rules of construction of contracts of pledge in general as to debts secured, see the C.J.S. title Pledges § 28, also 49 C.J. p 936 note 88-p 942 note 75, apply to pledges or assignments of exchange seats as security.¹⁰ The seat cannot be sold by the pledgee,¹¹ but the lien may be enforced against the proceeds accruing to the member on sale of the seat by the exchange.¹² The ordinary rules as to waiver, see the C.J.S. title Liens § 17, also 37 C.J. p 333 note 8-p 340 note 20, apply to this class of liens.¹³

Proceeds from the sale of the seat of a defaulting member may be applied to his debts to other members under exchange rules giving members a lien on the seat of each member.

The rules of an exchange generally give the members a lien on the seat of each member¹⁴ and authorize the exchange to sell the seat of a defaulting member or of a member who has been expelled or becomes ineligible for reinstatement,¹⁵ and to apply the proceeds to the payment of debts due from him to members of the exchange, the nature of the debts thus entitled to preferred pay-

Trust for repayment of money advanced

ment depending on the rules of the exchange,¹⁶ the effect of such rules being to make the seat of each member a continuing security to all members with whom the owner of the seat may deal, for the performance and fulfillment of his exchange contracts and engagements, in preference to the claims of third persons.¹⁷

Except as affected by statute¹⁸ such regulations as these are within the power of the exchange,¹⁹ and are binding on the member and all those claiming under him.²⁰

It has been held that, where a member becomes honestly insolvent and fails to qualify under the rules for readmission, or if he dies after the claims of the association are discharged, the proceeds may be paid to him or his legal representatives, but that in case a member should by misconduct forfeit his right to membership he is deprived of all claim upon the association,²¹ although it has been held that the termination of the right to membership does not ipso facto cause a forfeiture to the exchange of the money value of the membership.²²

Where the constitution of an exchange makes its president a trustee of the fund arising from the sale of a member's seat, the levy of attachment and execution by notice to the president is sufficient to fix the creditor's lien on the fund.²³

A member claimant may be precluded by his own acts or omissions from submitting claims, and may be enjoined from so doing by a court of competent jurisdiction.²⁴

Rules governing a member in default in dealings with other members are discussed infra § 10 d.

e. Seat of Deceased Member

Under exchange rules the seat of a member may be sold on his decease and the proceeds applied in accordance with such rules.

The rules of the exchange generally authorize it to sell the seat of a member on his decease, and provide that the proceeds shall be applied to the payment of debts due members of the exchange, and the balance, if any, paid to the deceased member's personal representative.²⁵ These regulations are binding on the personal representative of the deceased member.²⁶ The nature of the debts entitled to participate in the proceeds of sale depends on the rules of the exchange.²⁷ A rule requiring the seat of a deceased member to be disposed of by the exchange for the benefit of his successors in interest may be enforced by them as against the exchange.²⁸

Limited partnership agreement

A limited partnership agreement between a member and a nonmember providing for the application of proceeds from sale of member's seat is not invalid as in fraud of other creditors of such member in absence of evidence of fraud and duress, and particularly where such agreement has been filed with, and approved by, the exchange.—Rubin v. Whitney, 295 N.Y.S. 255, 162 Misc. 821.

may be proved where the constitution is ambiguous as to the disposition of the proceeds of a membership of an insolvent member.—In re Hayes, 75 N.Y.S. 312, 37 Misc. 264.

Retroactive operation

In accordance with rules stated in § 3 c supra, an amendment to the exchange constitution relating to the mode in which the proceeds of a sale of a seat in the exchange shall be distributed among the creditors of a former member does not govern the distribution of the proceeds of a seat sold before the amendment was made.—Weston v. § 10. — Dealings between Members

- a. In general
- b. Regulation by exchange
- c. Arbitration and adjustment within exchange
- d. Defaulting members
- e. Interference by courts

a. In General

Mutual dealings between exchange members, as such, are discussed in detail in subsequent subdivisions of this section. Rights and liabilities of such members as brokers are considered in Brokers §§ 23-147. Speculative transactions as gambling will be found treated in the C.J.S. title Gaming §§ 1, 9-17, 42-45, also 27 C.J. p 991 note 2-p 995 note 76, p 1053 note 40-1066 note 19, p 1088 note 81-1092 note 28.

b. Regulation by Exchange

Valid rules and regulations of an exchange relating to dealings between members are binding on them. General rules are applicable in determining the validity, construction, and operation of such exchange rules and regulations.

As between members of an exchange, rules concerning their mutual dealings, when valid, have the same effect as rules of law, and in so far as they are applicable they enter into and form a part of all contracts made by members in connection with transactions on change,²⁹ and members who have accepted the benefits of such rules should not be relieved of their consequential burdens except for the most compelling reasons.³⁰ The stipulations of such rules may, however, be waived.³¹ The principles heretofore stated as to the constitution charter, by-laws, and rules in general, see supra § 3, apply to these rules in determining their validity³² and construction and operation.³³

c. Arbitration and Adjustment within Exchange

- (1) In general
- (2) Procedure

(1) In General

Exchange rules and regulations usually provide for arbitrations of disputes arising out of dealings between members.

Provision for a domestic forum or board, or committee of arbitration, before which violations of the association's laws and regulations are inquired into and certain matters of dispute arising out of transactions among the members are investigated and determined is a common feature of the organization of an exchange.³⁴ Such rules are generally held valid,³⁵ and are not invalid as ousting the courts of jurisdiction even when they impose a penalty of expulsion or suspension for refusal to arbitrate.³⁶ In the case of an incorporated exchange, such rules must be within the powers conferred by charter³⁷ or statute.³⁸ Such rules are binding on the members³⁹ and have the same effect as an agreement in writing to submit to arbitration.⁴⁰

The pendency of an action at law precludes arbitration without plaintiff's consent;⁴¹ but an offer to arbitrate before nonmembers does not preclude a reference under rules of the exchange.⁴²

(2) Procedure

Jurisdiction of the exchange tribunal contemplated by exchange rules providing for arbitration of disputes arising out of dealings between members, is special and limited and must be exercised in accordance with the exchange constitution and by-laws.

Jurisdiction of an arbitration committee is special and limited.⁴³ The jurisdiction of these bodies is confined to matters which arise out of transactions conducted by the members as such.⁴⁴ It has been held that the committee cannot be the judge of its own jurisdiction as that would be usurping

the authority of the court,⁴⁵ but it has also been held that the committee has power to construe rules as to its jurisdiction when such rules reasonably admit of two constructions, although not otherwise.⁴⁶ Jurisdiction must be exercised in accordance with the constitution and by-laws.⁴⁷ Within these limits, the mode of procedure is within the discretion of the committee.⁴⁸ A member will not be required to submit his dispute to a court composed of interested persons.⁴⁹ A change in the personnel of an appeals committee by the substitution of one member thereof may not, however, constitute prejudice to an exchange member as a party;⁵⁰ nor may conduct on the part of a member of such committee, not amounting to fraud constitute such prejudice as will invalidate proceedings before that body.⁵¹

The judgment must be reasonably certain⁵² and in conformity with the rules and regulations of the exchange.⁵³ If, however, the committee proceeds regularly, its adjudication is conclusive on the parties;⁵⁴ and failure of exchange by-laws to provide who should appoint arbitrators may not

Waiver and estoppel. Objections to the mode of procedure may be waived.⁵⁷ A member may be estopped to deny the jurisdiction of the committee by his failure to challenge such jurisdiction.⁵⁸

d. Defaulting Members

General principles govern the construction of the constitution, charter, and by-laws as regards a member in default in dealings between members.

The general principles heretofore stated, see supra § 3, governing the construction of the constitution or charter and by-laws apply in determining the validity and construction of exchange rules relating to a member who is in default in dealings between members.⁵⁹ Default of a member as ground for disciplinary action is considered supra § 7, and rules relating the sale of a defaulting member's seat are discussed supra § 9.

e. Interference by Courts

- (1) Right of action
- (2) Limitation of action
- (3) Pleading
- (4) Evidence

(1) Right of Action

Under certain circumstances a member may resort to the courts in an action involving dealings between members of an exchange.

Awards and decisions of the exchange tribunals are reviewable by the courts so far as the legal rights of the parties are concerned, as in the case of awards of other arbitrators,⁶⁰ this being particularly true where the by-laws and rules of the exchange make no provision for appeal from the awards of arbitrators within the exchange.⁶¹ Where property rights are involved, the courts may supervise the action of an exchange to determine whether it has proceeded in accordance with its rules, and if it has failed in a substantial manner, may correct abuses.⁶² If the tribunal of the exchange unlawfully takes cognizance of matters which the members have not agreed to submit to the arbitration of the domestic forum, the courts may interfere by injunction to prevent the unauthorized determination.⁶³ A member may resort to the courts where he is made a victim of an open and arbitrary violation of the organic law by the officers.⁶⁴ A member may sue another member for deceit, although he procures an inspection of the subject matter of the transaction pursuant to the rules of the exchange.⁶⁵

Where a submission is revocable before award, the member is not, however, entitled to injunction against making an award.⁶⁶ A member cannot maintain a bill of interpleader between his principal and another member because of the losses which he will sustain through enforcement of the rights of his principal on one hand and the rules of the exchange on the other.⁶⁷

Generally a member cannot maintain suit on an exchange transaction without first seeking relief by proceeding in the manner prescribed by the rules of the exchange,⁶⁸ but the right of a member to appeal to another tribunal will not be denied on a doubtful construction of a by-law.⁶⁹ The courts will not review an adjudication of an exchange arbitration committee further than to determine whether it was regularly and fairly made.⁷⁰

(2) Limitation of Action

Exchange rules postponing right to commence an action between members also postpone accrual of the cause of action within general statutes of limitation.

Rules postponing the right to commence an action between members also postpone the accrual of the cause of action within statutes of limitation.⁷¹

(3) Pleading

General rules apply to actions between members of an exchange.

The rules of pleading in general, see the C.J.S. title Pleading §§ 1-602, also 49 C.J. p 30 note 2-p 886 note 58, apply to actions between members of an exchange.⁷²

(4) Evidence

General rules of evidence apply in actions between members of an exchange.

In an action on a contract between members, the constitution and by-laws are competent evidence.⁷³ Where defendant relied on an award which had been reversed on appeal to the general committee, he could not introduce evidence of a judgment of the board of managers, which had no control over the arbitrators, finding plaintiff guilty of misconduct in procuring the reversal.⁷⁴ Where the rules make oral contracts of a broker for the purchase of stock binding on him, although void under the statute of frauds, it will not be presumed that the broker received and paid for stock orally purchased by him because of a receipt by him of margin from his customer after the stock was ordered.⁷⁵

The rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in general, see Evidence §§ 1016-1052, apply to actions between members of exchanges.⁷⁶

§ 11. Rights, Duties, and Liabilities of Exchanges as to Third Persons

a. In general

b. Determination of exchange tribunal

a. In General

The indirect operation of exchange rules on nonmembers does not ordinarily entitle them to relief as against exchanges or their members.

Ordinarily nonmembers have no right to relief against the enforcement of rules of the exchange which operate directly on the members and only affect nonmembers indirectly;⁷⁷ nor can they avail themselves of such rules as against a member,⁷⁸ particularly as regards rules which are not mandatory.⁷⁹ So in the absence of some ulterior motive of the exchange exclusively directed against a third person it may not ordinarily be liable for loss resulting to such person as a result of exchange action in accordance with its by-laws, rules, and regulations.⁸⁰ A nonmember engaged in a proper and lawful business may, however, be entitled to relief from the operation of an exchange rule which, although operating directly on members, in effect threatens such business with destruction contrary to law.⁸¹ Moreover, nonmembers may be entitled to a remedy against members for noncompliance with exchange rules made for

(2) Evidence held insufficient to show that member of grain and cotton exchange was allegedly coerced to submit dispute to arbitration by knowledge that he would lose his membership in exchange if he refused.—Smith v. Commission Co. v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 243 Ill.App. 71, 23 C.J. p 270 note 79.

Reason for rule

The injury, if any, resulting to such nonmembers is merely the indirect or secondary consequence of such rule operating as a remote rather than a proximate cause of such injury.—Downes v. Bennett, 66 P. 623, 63 Kan. 653, 88 Am.S.R. 256, 55 L.R.A. 560—23 C.J. p 270 note 79 [a]. Constitution, by-laws, and rules of exchange as binding on nonmembers see supra § 3.

the protection of such nonmembers.⁸² Further, exchange rules may become the basis of a binding custom in dealings between members and nonmembers.⁸³

In the absence of its undertaking to be bound an exchange may not be bound by an agreement made with third persons on behalf of members for whose benefit such agreement is entered.⁸⁴

The doctrine of respondeat superior applies to questions as to liability of an exchange for tort.⁸⁵

Excluding nonmembers from premises. An exchange has the right to exclude from its premises persons who are not members and have entered thereon against its wishes.⁸⁶

Arbitration under rules of exchange. An agreement to arbitrate disputes under the rules of an exchange does not necessarily require the application of such rules as are not within the contemplation of the parties or involved in the arbitration agreement.⁸⁷

Assignments for benefit of creditors. In the absence of any conflict with, or violation of, statutory law the courts are not inclined to interfere with the practice of local exchanges in procuring assignments, executed in good faith, for the benefit of creditors generally.⁸⁸

b. Determination of Exchange Tribunal

The determination of an exchange tribunal in enforcing its own rules and regulations is usually regarded as conclusive as to their construction and as to matters within its jurisdiction.

In consonance with the policy of the courts not to interfere with the enforcement by an exchange of its own constitution, rules, or by-laws, see supra

§ 3, or on behalf of exchange members, see supra § 8, the courts will not, ordinarily, entertain jurisdiction of an action by a third person to review the determination of an exchange tribunal in enforcing its rules and regulations.⁸⁹ Although by-laws requiring arbitration between a member and a nonmember may be beyond the powers of the exchange, they are not illegal in a sense that defendant would not be bound after having submitted himself to the jurisdiction created thereby.⁹⁰

A member is not bound by the determination of an exchange tribunal in proceedings involving third persons which are not conducted in accordance with the constitution of such exchange.⁹¹ A nonmember cannot be bound by proceedings of a committee of an exchange where he is not given notice or an opportunity to be heard.⁹² Even where nonmembers subject themselves to the rules of the exchange by their course of dealing, they are not bound by an adjudication of a committee of the exchange beyond the jurisdiction given by its by-laws or constitution.⁹³

That a member of the bodies to which appeals are taken within the exchange was one of the arbitration committee which in the first instance decided adversely to a member does not affect his qualification.⁹⁴

On an appeal in an arbitration proceeding under the rules of the exchange no interested party is of right entitled to be present.⁹⁵ In court proceedings to review arbitration proceedings between a member and a nonmember, the presumption is that the evidence sustained the decisions of the tribunal within the exchange.⁹⁶

§ 12. — Quotations

- a. In general
- b. Right to discriminate

a. In General

Except as modified by public regulations, when applicable, an exchange has a property right in its quotations.

Except as modified or limited by public regulation when the exchange is regarded as engaged in a business affecting the public interest, see supra § 2, until voluntary publication of its market quotations an exchange has a right of property in them.⁹⁸ It may accordingly withhold them entirely from the public,⁹⁹ or, if it elects to permit their dissemination, it may lawfully do so.¹ It does not lose its right by communicating the quotations to persons, even if many, in confidential relations to itself, under a contract not to make them public.² It may impose on its licensees such conditions regarding their use as are necessary to prevent the use of the quotations for unlawful purposes.³ Publications in breach of contract do not affect the rights of the exchange.⁴ The quotations of an exchange engaged in a business affecting a public interest are subject to reasonable public regulations.⁵

The exchange is entitled to the protection of its property right, in its quotations, in equity,⁶ subject to the usual rules of remedy and procedure,⁷ even though the quotations are used for unlawful as well as for lawful purposes,⁸ and a telegraph company to whom the exchange sells quotations for distribution is also entitled to protection.⁹

The right of an exchange to discriminate in authorizing use of its quotations depends on whether they affect the public interest.

Where it is not a public corporation,¹⁰ and its quotations are not impressed with a trust in favor of the public,¹¹ an exchange may give out its quotations only to such persons as it sees fit to nominate, excluding all others,¹² and no rule of public policy is violated by discrimination in the nomination of licensees.¹³ Where, however, an exchange is engaged in a business to which the interest of the public attaches it may be subject to public regulations prohibiting discrimination in authorizing use of its quotations,¹⁴ and there are cases to the effect that a public interest attaches to the quotations, where they are given out, which entitles nonmembers to receive them for a lawful purpose without unjust discrimination, and on the same terms given by the exchange to others.¹⁵ At any rate, it may be within the province of the

EXCUSE.

As a Noun

Derived from "ex causa,"⁷⁴ hence, a justification, a plea offered in extenuation of a fault or neglect;⁷⁵ a matter alleged as a reason for relief or exemption from some duty or obligation, or a reason alleged for doing or not doing a thing;⁷⁶ that which is offered as a reason for being excused, or that which extenuates or justifies a fault;⁷⁷ also an authority or a reasonable belief in authority.⁷⁸ In a particular connection, the word has been defined as that plea or statement made by the accused which arises out of the state of facts constituting and relied on as the cause.⁷⁹ The term presupposes the imposition of a duty and a qualification to perform it.⁸⁰

The noun has been held synonymous with "defense" see 26 C.J.S. p 674 note 88. It has been distinguished from "just cause" see 14 C.J.S. p 44 note 43, although the distinction has been said to be largely metaphysical.⁸¹

The maxim discussed

(1) It "is a maxim which lies at the foundation of a general rule of public policy, the rule that the courts will not sustain an action which arises out of the moral turpitude of the plaintiff or out of his violation of a general law enacted to carry into effect the public policy of the state or nation."—*Levy v. Similar maxims compared

"There are several old and very familiar maxims of the common law which formulate the result of that law in regard to illegal contracts. They are cited in all law books upon the subject and are known to all of us. They mean substantially the same thing and are founded upon the same principles and reasoning. They are: 'Ex dolo malo non oritur actio'; 'Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio'; 'Ex turpi causa non oritur actio.'"—McMullen v. Hoffman, Or., 19 S.Ct. 839, 845, 174 U.S. 639, 43 L.Ed. 1117.

are used with a variety of meanings,⁹⁵ generally determinable from the context.⁹⁶ They are derived from the Latin "ex sequi," meaning to follow out, follow to the end, or perform, and equivalent to the French "executer,"⁹⁷ so that, when used in their proper sense, all three convey the meaning of carrying out some act or course of conduct to its completion.⁹⁸ Thus, when the terms are applied to a written instrument, they include the performance of all acts which may be necessary to render it complete as an instrument importing the intended obligation, or of every act required to give the instrument validity, to carry it into effect, or to give it the forms required to render it valid;⁹⁹ and in a technical sense the words necessarily include the performance of three acts which are signing, sealing, and delivery,¹ and, in some instances, a fourth act, namely, the acknowledgment of the instrument;² but the act of delivery is not always included;³ and not infrequently the terms are employed to express merely the acts of signing and sealing,⁴ or of signing only.⁵

As applied to contracts the terms may convey two meanings, one relating to the formal requisites, see Contracts § 53 et seq, the other relating to the performance, see Contracts § 451 et seq. I. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL

§ 1. Definition and Nature

a. In general

b. Nature of as action or cause of action

a. In General

An execution is a judicial writ issuing from the court where the judgment is rendered, directed to an officer thereof, and running against the body or goods of a party, by which the judgment of the court is enforced.

An execution is a judicial writ¹ issuing from the court where the judgment is rendered,² directed to an officer thereof, and running against the body or goods of a party,³ by which the judgment of the court is enforced.⁴ It has also been defined as the end of the law;⁵ final process and the end of the law;⁶ the end and fruit of the law;⁷ the act of carrying into effect the judgment or decree of a court;⁸ the final judgment of a court,⁹ or other jurisdictions, and the writ which authorizes the officer so to carry into effect such judgment;¹⁰ a writ which authorizes the officer to carry a judgment into effect;¹¹ the process by which the debt, or damages, or other things recovered, and the costs adjudged, is obtained;¹² the embodied power of the court, in the shape of a command to a ministerial officer,¹³ respecting the rights of the parties to the judgment, and imposing on the officer certain duties and liabilities prescribed by law.¹⁴

The term has also been applied to the writ to give possession of anything recovered,¹⁵ and as including the acts done under the writ.¹⁶ It is a "mandate" as that term is defined by some statutes,¹⁷ and is the only method of enforcing a money judgment in an action at law.¹⁸ The commitment for failure to pay a fine for contempt has been held an execution, using the term in a broad sense.¹⁹ A tax warrant, while in the nature of an execution, is not, strictly speaking, an execution.²⁰ Execution is not an indispensable adjunct of judicial process.²¹

In many jurisdictions the writ of execution is statutory.²² As used in statutes the term "execution" is often construed in a broad sense as including more than the writ as already defined,²³ al-

Attachment

The term "executions" as used in New Mexico Code 1915 § 1267, dealing with commissions which the sheriff may charge in cases, where the sheriff has collected a judgment on execution without making a sale of the judgment debtor's property, is sufficiently broad to include attach-though it is sometimes used as merely equivalent to a fieri facias.²⁴ Thus, it sometimes embraces all the appropriate means to execution of the judgment;²⁵ all means by which the judgments or decrees of courts are enforced;²⁶ all processes issued to carry into effect the final judgment of a court;²⁷ all processes and proceedings in aid of, or supplemental to, execution that are customary in civil cases;²⁸ and it is sometimes used as the equivalent of "order of sale"²⁹ or "judgment,"³⁰ or seizure of property.³¹ Generally, the term as used in a statute is broad enough to include both executions against property and executions against the person.³² It is to be distinguished from "a copy of the judgment,"³³ and "garnishment."³⁴ The words "levy and sale" may be equivalent to the word "execution."³⁵ The term "executions" sometimes includes a special execution under an attachment act.³⁶ As used in certain statutes, an execution has been distinguished from a judgment.³⁷

Executory proceedings operate in rem and not in personam.³⁸

b. Nature of as Action or Cause of Action

While the issuance and levy of an execution is a remedy by which the creditor seeks to secure satisfaction of his debt, it is not a cause of action, an action, or a special proceeding.

The issuance and levy of execution against a judgment debtor is a remedy by which the creditor seeks to secure satisfaction of his debt, but it is no part of the remedy by which it is determined whether there is a debt or demand owing to him.³⁹ An execution is neither a cause of action,⁴⁰ an action,⁴¹ nor a special proceeding,⁴² although certain execution proceedings have been held to be actions or suits.⁴³ Moreover, it is held that a statute providing that there shall be but one form of civil action includes in the term "civil action" the remedies provided for the enforcement of judgments.⁴⁴

§ 2. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

Constitutional and statutory provisions relating to executions, where enacted, are controlling.

Various statutory provisions have been enacted in the different jurisdictions, relative to executions, to which the general rules as to the constitutionality, interpretation, operation, and effect of statutes in general have been applied.⁴⁵ Generally, statutes authorizing or prohibiting executions will

(3) The Execution Act must be considered in its entirety.—Moran v. Joyce, 11 A.2d 420, 124 N.J.Law 255.

(4) All statutes providing for collection of debts, liens, proceedings supplementary to execution, and other methods of attaching property and satisfying judgments, householder's exemption laws, and laws against assignment of wages, must be construed in pari materia when dealing with question of executions not be considered as retroactive unless the language employed expressly so warrants,⁴⁶ although a statute in general terms exempting certain property from levy and sale on execution has been held applicable to debts contracted previous to the passage thereof.⁴⁷ The state may provide that some forms of property may be reached by creditors through execution or other process.⁴⁸ Statutes relating to attachments are generally not applicable to executions.⁴⁹

§ 3. Assignability of Writ

Subject to statutory provisions applicable thereto, the writ is assignable.

It has been said that there might be a legal difficulty in transferring the writ so that the assignee could maintain a suit founded on it, although the right of receiving the money on it and of directing the officer in its execution is clearly assignable.⁵⁰ In other cases, however, the assignment has been held to be valid,⁵¹ and under some statutes a transfer must be made under certain conditions.⁵² Statutes sometimes provide that a transfer, to be valid, must be in writing.⁵³ When the transfer is in writing and entered on the fieri facias with intention to pass title, possession and actual delivery is not essential to the validity of its transfer by the plaintiff in fieri facias or his assignee.⁵⁴ Whether a payment by a third person constitutes a satisfaction or a transfer depends on the intention of the parties.⁵⁵ An assignment by an attorney in fact, having only a naked power to act in the suit in plaintiff's name, is no evidence that the assignee is a purchaser for valuable consideration.⁵⁶ An execution which is void in the hands of the original judgment creditor is void and without effect even though transferred and assigned to another for valuable consideration.⁵⁷

§ 4. Actions and Proceedings in Which Executions Authorized

Executions are authorized in various actions or proceedings, including actions and proceedings for the recovery of a money judgment.

It may be broadly stated that executions are authorized in any actions or proceedings in which a money judgment is recoverable, and in any other actions or proceedings where authorized by statute. A statute providing that judgments for penalties may be enforced by execution in like manner as judgments in civil cases are enforced applies to all judgments for penalties, whether recovered by civil or criminal proceedings.⁵⁸

In the code states where judgments at law and decrees in equity are all denominated judgments, a judgment requiring the payment of money, although and exemptions.—Martin v. Loula, 195 N.E. 881, 208 Ind. 346, denying rehearing 194 N.E. 178, 208 Ind. 346, followed in *White v. Delivery of personal property at appraisalment

The constitution of the United States, prohibiting the states from making anything but gold and silver a legal tender and from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts did not, as to antecedent debts, repeal the Acts Assem. 1716c 16, relating to the execution of a fieri facias, by delivering up the personal estate at an appraisalment, and the delivery over to the creditor of sufficient to satisfy his execution.—*Donaldson v. in the form of a decree in equity, is enforceable by execution.⁵⁹

§ 5. Judgment, Decree, or Order as Basis of Writ

- a. In general
- b. Several executions on one judgment
- c. One execution on separate judgments

a. In General

Except as it may be otherwise provided by statute, an execution cannot lawfully issue other than on a final judgment or decree pronounced by a competent court which has determined the respective rights and liabilities of the parties.

Except as it may be otherwise provided by statute, an execution cannot be lawfully issued on other than a final judgment or decree pronounced by a competent court which has determined the respective rights and liabilities of the parties litigant,⁶⁰ and an execution issued without a judgment or decree to support it is void and confers no authority on the officer to whom it is directed.⁶¹ The courts adhere to this rule with strictness; the parties to the action cannot by agreement confer on a clerk authority to issue execution for a debt not evidenced by a judgment,⁶² and a mere verdict⁶³ or finding,⁶⁴ or copy of the judge's bench notes,⁶⁵ or a decree or order that money be brought into court,⁶⁶ or an award,⁶⁷ or an order of the probate court stating a guardian's account and ordering him to pay to his successor the balance found due from him on such accounting,⁶⁸ is not sufficient where no judgment has been rendered. So, too, a filing of the necessary papers authorizing an entry of judgment by confession in vacation without such entry actually being made is not sufficient.⁶⁹ A judgment rendered after the issuance of the execution will not have a retrospective effect so as to validate the execution.⁷⁰ An agreed order of settlement has been held not a judgment on which execution might issue, although entered of record.⁷¹

A replevin bond, having the force of a judgment, is sufficient basis for the issuance of an execution.⁷²

Orders for the payment of money are, by statute in some jurisdictions, enforceable by execution;⁷³ but it has been held that such a statute does not apply where money is directed to be paid into court as distinguished from to a party or other person.⁷⁴

b. Several Executions on One Judgment

Separate executions cannot be taken out on different portions of a single judgment.

Plaintiff cannot divide his judgment and take out separate executions for different portions thereof.⁷⁵

"Judgment" is usually imposed in in iudicio, although it may be for enforcement of an indebtedness previously contracted, and it is immediately payable and enforceable by execution against the property of a judgment debtor who has property which is not exempt from execution.—Cherey v. City of Long Beach, 26 N.E.2d 945, 282 N.Y. 382, affirming 17 N.Y.S.2d 541, 258 App.Div. 986.

Necessity in particular actions or proceedings

Although common-law rule that a judgment must precede an execution is subject to statutory innovations, in an action for commissions for services rendered in procuring a loan, no execution for the debt could issue without a final judgment being entered against defendant.—Le Menager v. Northwestern Barb Wire Co., 16 N.E.2d 824, 296 Ill.App. 568.

Proceeding to establish claim against estate

A proceeding under the statute providing that, when notice is given of a disputed claim against an estate, the judge of the court having jurisdiction of the administration shall on written application hear and pass on its validity, does not lead to a money judgment on which execution may issue, but is intended only to fix the rights of parties to a fund in trust, being administered in that court, so as to determine who is entitled thereto on distribution.—Tillery v. 23 C.J. p 315 note 12.

Thus, a money judgment being an entirety, separate executions cannot issue on each of the counts of the complaint, although there were findings and a judgment on each count separately;⁷⁶ but where a judgment decrees a distinct and separate amount in favor of particular plaintiffs, a separate execution may issue in favor of each.⁷⁷ Where plaintiff recovers a money demand and defendant is awarded costs, the costs should be set off against plaintiff's recovery and only one execution awarded for the recovery in excess of the costs;⁷⁸ but executions may issue severally to complainant in original bill and to complainant in cross bill for the sums adjudged to them respectively.⁷⁹

Each judgment must carry its own execution, and a single execution cannot be issued on two or more judgments.

While a judgment creditor is entitled to issue execution on each judgment obtained against defendant,⁸⁰ each judgment must carry its own execution, and a single execution cannot be issued on two or more separate judgments.⁸¹ Thus, when separate judgments are recovered against several defendants in different suits, it is not permissible to issue one execution on such separate judgments, although they are all in favor of the same plaintiff.⁸² Likewise, where two or more plaintiffs in separate actions obtain separate judgments against the same defendant, an execution should not be issued as if on a joint judgment, but an execution should be issued on each judgment;⁸³ but where, in one action, judgments against one or more are entered at one time and against others at another time, one execution may be issued against all.⁸⁴ So plaintiff who holds several judgments against a debtor, and different sureties or indorsers, may, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, issue execution on any one of the judgments.⁸⁵

Void or voidable. A single execution on several judgments has been held not merely voidable but void.⁸⁶ On the other hand, such execution has been held not void;⁸⁷ and it has been held that such an execution, while irregular, is not void if sufficient to identify the two judgments or if it contains sufficient recitals to indicate where the records of the judgment can be found, and if such records fully identify each judgment.⁸⁸

§ 6. — Form and Requisites in General

- a. General rules
- b. Direction for execution in judgment
- c. Necessity for final judgment
- d. Amount

a. General Rules

In general, so long as the judgment is valid no particular form is necessary to support an execution thereon, but there must be a judicial ascertainment of the party to whom the money is due, and a clear statement of the final determination of the court.

The judgment need be in no particular form to support an execution thereon so long as its validity is unaffected,⁸⁹ although where the statute prescribes a certain form of execution and judgment a substantial compliance therewith is necessary.⁹⁰ There must, however, be a judicial ascertainment of the party to whom the money is due,⁹¹ and a clear statement of the final determination of the court.⁹² Thus an execution cannot issue on a decree which leaves with the clerk for settlement a question not within his jurisdiction.⁹³ There must be an absolute money judgment.⁹⁴ A judgment directing restitution of money is a judgment for a sum of mon-

Personal judgment for money

Judgment, ordering defendants to pay over to plaintiffs stated sum "loaned by defendants as trustees . . . in violation of their trust," is a personal judgment for such sum, not merely an order to pay it over if and when loans were repaid, so that plaintiffs were entitled to exe-

ey within an execution statute.⁹⁵ A judgment for the payment of money and the delivery of property may be enforced by execution.⁹⁶ Execution on a decree establishing a general lien on all of defendant's property could be levied on particular lots without a special lien on such lots, even if a portion of the decree which established a special lien on such lots was void.⁹⁷ If judgment is vacated as to deceased defendant, and entered nunc pro tunc against the survivors, only one execution can issue thereon.⁹⁸

It is not necessary that the judgment or decree direct issuance of execution.

An execution is authorized, although no provision to that effect is contained in the judgment⁹⁹ or decree¹ on which the execution is based.

c. Necessity for Final Judgment

To be a sufficient basis for an execution the judgment or decree must be final.

It is essential that the judgment, to be a sufficient basis for a valid execution, be not a mere interlocutory order, or dependent on a mere contingency, but it must be a final determination of the contention between the parties;² and must dispose of all the parties;³ and where a joint judgment is opened as to one of the joint debtors, execution cannot issue against the other until the final determination of the liability of his coöbligor.⁴ A judgment is final within this rule, although not expressly disposing of all the issues, where it impliedly does so.⁵ So, also, a judgment is final which determines the rights of the parties but reserves for future consideration some independent branch of the case.⁶ So where the matters at issue are clearly divisible, and a judgment is rendered on one point, which it is clear is in no way affected by a judgment on the other point, execution may issue on the former judgment.⁷ Where there is a default judgment against one defendant, and the jury finds adversely to the codefendant, the subsequent judgment against both is a final judgment authorizing execution.⁸ Under the common law a judgment did not become final until the end of the term and the court had no power to direct execution thereon during such term.⁹ This rule has been modified by statute.¹⁰ A judgment becomes final so as to authorize execution when the losing party has either waived or lost the right to move for a new trial or appeal.¹¹ Where defendant has a right of set-off, a judgment for plaintiff could not become final so as to be enforced cutation thereon, reference to loans being surplussage.—Avakian v. Dusenberry, 58 P.2d 1306, 15 Cal.App.2d 55.

Judgments held final

(1) In mortgage foreclosure, judgment fixing amount due plaintiffs and amount of first lien on property, ordering property sold, directing manner of sale, providing for distribution of proceeds of sale, and ordering that after sale defendants would be foreclosed from any interest in property, was "final judgment" on issues between plaintiffs and defendants, as regards issuance of execution, notwithstanding pending cross petition by one defendant against a codefendant.—MacKenchnie v. Voight, 86 P.2d 991, 184 Okl. 291.

(2) Judgment for certain amount, with interest and costs, against partnership, and authorizing execution thereon, is "final" and enforceable by execution against partners individually.—Baria v. Taylor, Tex.Civ.App. 57 S.W.2d 858.

In Louisiana

(1) An executory judgment is subject to execution.—Wetherbee v. Lodwick Lumber Co., 193 So. 671, 194 La. 352.

(2) Decree of court of appeal affirming judgment became final on registration thereof in parish wherein suit originated, and hence execution issued thereon was not invalid on ground that judgment was executory. Registration before receipt of record used by such court does not render judgment executory so as to invalidate execution issued thereon, where district judge who was defendant in suit, had record in his possession when decree was registered; and minute entry in district court of affirmation of judgment is not condition precedent to right to have execution issued thereon.—*Jones v. by execution until defendant's claims by way of set-off were finally adjudicated.¹²

Judgment nisi. An execution may issue in some states on a judgment nisi entered on filing the circuit record and posted, although such execution becomes void if the rule to show that cause is made absolute.¹³

d. Amount

There must be a specification of the amount to be recovered in the judgment before execution can issue thereon.

It is essential that there be a specification of the amount to be recovered in the judgment before execution can issue thereon,¹⁴ and where the judgment is rendered for a debt or damages, and for costs, execution cannot be issued for the collection of such costs, if the amount thereof is not designated, except in cases where the law authorizes the clerk to tax the costs and include them in the execution.¹⁵

§ 7. — Particular Judgments

- a. Contingent or conditional judgment
- b. Dormant judgment
- c. Foreign judgment
- d. Judgment by confession
- e. Judgment after revival
- f. Judgment without personal notice
- g. Judgment on appeal

a. Contingent or Conditional Judgment

A judgment on condition can be enforced by execution only in pursuance of the conditions thereof.

A judgment on condition can be enforced by execution only in pursuance of the conditions thereof,¹⁶ and where plaintiff recovers subject to the condition of making certain payments, an execution cannot issue to enforce such payments;¹⁷ but where it appears that the condition or contingency on which the judgment might be satisfied from a different source or for a lesser amount has not been complied with, execution may at once issue for the amount of the same.¹⁸ A decree conditioned that, on return of a deposit on the purchase price a purchaser's bill for specific performance would be dismissed is not a final decree as regards execution.¹⁹

Ordinarily, an execution cannot issue on a dormant judgment. Generally speaking, if such execution is issued, it is voidable, although it has been held void.

Except where otherwise provided by statute,²⁰ an execution cannot be issued on a dormant judgment,²¹ but a scieri facias must issue to revive it;²² and since, as stated infra § 8, an execution on a judgment that is void is of no avail, it follows that if the statutes specifically declare a dormant judgment void an execution and sale thereon are also void.²³ Generally speaking, although an execution issued on a dormant judgment has been held absolutely void,²⁴ it is not void, but only voidable,²⁵ and it may be set aside at the instance of defendant unless the judgment has been properly revived;²⁶ and the principle that an innocent purchaser will be protected where the only informality of a judgment is its dormancy does not apply where defendant may also set up as a defense the statute of limitations.²⁷ However, an execution issued while a judgment is yet alive is good, and may be completed by the officer after the expiration of the statutory period of limitation.²⁸

Execution cannot properly issue on a foreign judgment.

There is, in the absence of statutory permission, no way of proceeding on a foreign judgment other than by action,²⁹ and the constitutional provision

d. Judgment by Confession

In general, an execution may issue on a judgment by confession.

An execution may issue on a judgment by confession the same as on any other judgment unless otherwise provided by statute,³² although in some jurisdictions such issuance is under the equitable control of the court in which the judgment may be rendered;³³ and a party issuing execution on a judgment entered by warrant of attorney proceeds at his peril,³⁴ and the power of the attorney to confess such judgment must clearly appear.³⁵

e. Judgment after Revival

Where a judgment is revived, in some jurisdictions execution should issue on the original judgment, in others it must issue on the scire facias judgment, and in others it has been held immaterial on which of the judgments it issues.

Where judgment is revived it is held in some jurisdictions that the execution should be issued on the original judgment,³⁶ although it has been held that the issuing of the execution on the judgment recovered on the scire facias is but an irregularity.³⁷ On the other hand, in some states it is held to be immaterial on which of the judgments the execution issues, since it is legal in either case.³⁸ In other jurisdictions, where a judgment is renewed by scire facias, it is the rule that execution can thereafter issue only on the scire facias judgment and not on the original judgment.³⁹ An execution issued on a judgment not regularly revived is voidable merely, and not void;⁴⁰ but on the other hand a judgment of revival entered without bringing necessary parties before the court has been held insufficient to support an execution issued on it.⁴¹

f. Judgment without Personal Notice

In general, a personal service on defendant, or his appearance in the proceedings in which the judgment is obtained, is necessary to authorize a general execution against him.

A personal service on defendant, or his appearance in the proceedings in which the judgment is obtained, is necessary to authorize a general execution against him,⁴² and a mere entry on the docket of "judgment by default" has been held insufficient to support execution,⁴³ although by virtue of statutory provisions in some jurisdictions execution may be taken out against a nonresident defendant, or one who has had no personal notice, on giving a proper bond.⁴⁴

On service of notice by publication. A service of notice on defendant by publication only is usually held to be insufficient to authorize a personal judgment on which a general execution can issue where there was no appearance by defendant or on his behalf,⁴⁵ and an execution sale thereunder passes no title.⁴⁶

Where an appeal has been taken, executions may issue on the judgment rendered by the appellate court; and whether the lower or higher court should issue the execution depends on the particular case.

The remedy by execution on judgments rendered by an appellate court exists the same as on judgments rendered by an inferior tribunal.⁴⁷ If the judgment is wholly affirmed the execution should issue from the lower court.⁴⁸ On the other hand, if the judgment on appeal fixes the liability of parties whose liability was not determined by the lower court, execution should issue on the judgment rendered by the appellate tribunal rather than on that rendered by the lower court.⁴⁹ If the judgment is reversed or a new judgment is rendered by the appellate court, execution may issue from such court or from the lower court on the judgment of the appellate court,⁵⁰ but not on the judgment which has been reversed.⁵¹ In reversing a judgment for defendant, where the defense was not established, the appellate court may order issuance of execution in favor of plaintiff.⁵² If the appeal is dismissed by consent of parties, execution may be taken out as if no appeal had been taken.⁵³

§ 8. — Validity

An execution to be valid must have a valid judgment to support it. A valid execution may issue on a judgment which while not void is irregular or erroneous, or voidable.

Where, because of want of jurisdiction of the court rendering judgment,⁵⁴ fatal defects in the proceedings,⁵⁵ uncertainty of the verdict,⁵⁶ fraud,⁵⁷ or for any other cause,⁵⁸ the judgment is void, an execution issued thereon is of no validity and no title can be acquired under it; nor can such execution be validated by an amendment to the judgment subsequent to the issuance of the writ, the reason being that if the amendment were valid the execution would show a different judgment than the one on which it was issued, and would therefore on that account be a nullity; and if the amendment were invalid, the judgment on which the execution was issued would still be void.⁵⁹ Where the judgment is void, the court cannot compel an officer to issue an execution to the creditor.⁶⁰ However, if a judgment is valid as to a certain sum but is invalid as to the balance, an execution is not subject to collateral attack because thereof.⁶¹ Of course, where the judgment is valid a valid execution can issue.⁶² It is not improper to issue a writ of fieri facias on a judgment rendered by a judge who had nothing to do with the trial of the case, where the judgment was entered by direction and with the consent of the trial judge.⁶³ A judgment of a court of a Confederate state during the Civil War was enforceable by execution after the war.⁶⁴ void judgment applies only to judgments which are legally of no force or effect, and may therefore be attacked collaterally, and has no application to judgments which are merely erroneous⁶⁵ or voidable,⁶⁶ or subject merely to some irregularity or informality;⁶⁷ and the amendment of an imperfectly entered judgment, making it perfect as originally ordered, imparts validity to an execution previously issued.⁶⁸ Where defendant acquiesces in a particular form of judgment against himself, an execution issued thereunder is not only not void but not even irregular.⁶⁹ An execution based in part on a valid judgment, to which it is shown on its face to relate, is not wholly void, although in part based on another void judgment, rendering it excessive and voidable, or subject to correction.⁷⁰ So, where a judgment was a valid lien to the extent of the portion not assigned by the judgment creditor, an alias execution for the sale of land was not invalid because for the full amount of the judgment.⁷¹

§ 9. — Rendition and Entry or Docketing

While in some jurisdictions an official entry or docketing is a condition precedent to the right to the writ, in others such entry or docketing is not essential to enable a party to issue an execution on a judgment which has been duly rendered.

While the entry or docketing of a judgment is necessary for the purpose of creating a lien, see the C.J.S. title Judgments § 463, also 34 C.J. p 576 note 68 et seq, yet at common law an execution was issuable on the signing of a final judgment and before its entry of record, providing there was no writ of error pending or agreement to the contrary,⁷² and such entry or docketing is not essential, in many jurisdictions, to enable a party to issue an execution thereon where the judgment has otherwise been duly rendered,⁷³ and the failure of the clerk to enter of record the judgment rendered, within any particular time, does not render invalid an execution valid when issued.⁷⁴ Where statutes so provide, entry of the verdict in the minutes will sustain an execution issued before entry of the judgment.⁷⁵ However, in some states, by virtue of statutes or otherwise, an official entry or docketing is a condition precedent to the right to the writ,⁷⁶ especially where the judgment is by confession.⁷⁷ Statutes requiring entry of judgment as a condition precedent do not, however, include the making up of the judgment roll,⁷⁸ and the general rule is that execution may issue before filing or making up the judgment roll,⁷⁹ but such a requirement is not universal.⁸⁰ If the statute merely requires an entry of the judgment it seems that it need not be docketed.⁸¹

Time of entry and effect of failure to enter. The time when the judgment must be entered, where necessary, is generally regulated by statutory provisions, and filing within such time will permit issuance of execution.⁸² The law will not notice fractions of a day in order to determine whether or not the record was thus complete before the execution issued, unless it is clearly necessary to prevent an injustice;⁸³ and it seems that, where the record is subsequently completed, the execution becomes effective from that time,⁸⁴ since an entry nunc pro tunc is sufficient to support and validate an execution.⁸⁵ The irregularity of issuing execution before entry of judgment or before the filing of the judgment roll may generally be cured by subsequent entry of the judgment⁸⁶ or filing of the roll.⁸⁷ So, too, for the purpose of the validity of an execution, a judgment entered in term time will be presumed to have been entered up during the actual session of the court;⁸⁸ and a failure to make formal entry is an irregularity which may be waived by failing to make a motion to vacate until several months after the execution has been issued.⁸⁹ Generally the failure formally to enter or docket the judgment before issuing execution renders the execution voidable only,⁹⁰ but where such entry is essential to the existence of a valid judgment, an execution issued prior thereto is void.⁹¹

Defective entry. Where the amount of the judgment is inadvertently omitted from the judgment entry, a correction nunc pro tunc validates an execution theretofore issued.⁹²

Where a judgment is registered for the purpose of creating a lien, the execution is nevertheless issued on the original judgment.⁹³

§ 10. — Transcript of Judgment of Inferior Court

When so provided by statute, and on compliance therewith, one having judgment in an inferior court may, by filing a transcript thereof in a superior court, obtain execution against all properties for which an execution could issue when sued out on a judgment originally obtained in such superior tribunal.

Under the statutory provisions in some jurisdictions a creditor having a judgment in a justice's or other inferior court may, by filing a transcript thereof in the circuit or other superior court, obtain execution against all properties for which an execution could issue when sued out on a judgment originally obtained in such superior tribunal;⁹⁴ but it is essential that the filing be made within the period prescribed by statute,⁹⁵ and an execution issued without the filing of a transcript is void.⁹⁶ So if the judgment of the inferior court is void, the transcript is void and the execution of no effect.⁹⁷

§ 11. Effect of Acts or Proceedings after Judgment

- a. In general
- b. Loss or destruction of record
- c. Discharge of judgment
- d. Vacating or modifying judgment

a. In General

Any condition of affairs arising subsequent to the rendition of judgment, to operate as a suspension of the right to execution, must change the legal relationship of the parties.

Any condition of affairs arising subsequent to the rendition of judgment, to operate as a suspension of the right to execution, must of course change the legal relationship of the parties in some particular.⁹⁸ The right is not suspended by permitting a nonresident defendant to come in and enter a defense after judgment,⁹⁹ nor does the mere taking of security operate to suspend the execution, in the absence of an agreement to that effect.¹ A compromise and settlement after rendition of a judgment will bar a subsequent issuance of execution.²

b. Loss or Destruction of Record

Execution may issue notwithstanding the loss or destruction of the record of the judgment.

Where a judgment is once recovered, it remains in force until satisfied or barred by limitation, although the evidence of its recovery may be lost or destroyed, and in such case if the party desires to enforce it the correct practice, it seems, is to make an application to the court and introduce such evidence of destruction as may be in his possession showing the fact of rendition, and the loss or destruction of the record, and where such evidence is satisfactory an execution should be awarded;³ but this ought not to be done without notice to the party against whom the judgment was rendered and before it is restored.⁴ If part of the transcript is lost, the circuit court may make an order supplying the original papers.⁵

c. Discharge of Judgment

- (1) In general
- (2) Fees and charges of officer
- (3) What constitutes a discharge

(1) In General

When the judgment becomes in legal contemplation in effect satisfied, no execution can lawfully issue thereon.

When, on any state of facts, the judgment becomes in legal contemplation in effect satisfied, no execution can lawfully issue thereon.⁶ Satisfaction of a judgment is also a satisfaction of an execution issued thereon.⁷ The writ should not be issued after a tender of the amount of the judgment and all proper costs and fees;⁸ but an execution issued on a satisfied judgment of which no entry has been made is not void but merely voidable.⁹ If the discharge is adjudged void, execution may issue.¹⁰

Partial satisfaction does not preclude the right to issue execution for the balance due on the judgment,¹¹ and in such a case an execution for the entire amount of the judgment is voidable but not void,¹² and is amendable.¹³

Payment of a judgment by a third person will as a rule operate as a satisfaction in the absence of any evidence of an assignment, and no execution can issue thereon after such payment,¹⁴ although where he pays in consideration for its assignment and not in satisfaction he may sue out execution.¹⁵ Thus the purchase of a judgment by the judgment debtor's agent constitutes payment thereof, precluding execution.¹⁶

(2) Fees and Charges of Officer

Where a judgment is satisfied or discharged, an officer who may be entitled to fees is not entitled to levy an execution to collect them.

An officer has no interest in a judgment sufficient to authorize him to interfere with or control any settlement or agreement which the parties thereto may think proper to make; his fees are but incidental to the judgment, and if it is satisfied or discharged he must look to the parties for them and cannot levy an execution for the purpose of their collection.¹⁷ There is, however, authority to the contrary.¹⁸ So it is held that no execution can issue for fees due a witness when the judgment has been satisfied.¹⁹

(3) What Constitutes a Discharge

- (a) In general
- (b) Payment by joint debtor

(a) In General

A discharge of a judgment may, among other matters, result from a discharge in bankruptcy, collection of a note for the amount of the judgment, payment of one of two judgments for the same debt, etc.

A discharge of a judgment, whereby an execution rendered thereon is a nullity, may result, inter alia, from a discharge of defendant in bankruptcy,²⁰ the collection of a note given for the amount of the judgment,²¹ the allowance of a set-off,²² the payment of one of two judgments for the same debt,²³ or compliance with certain statutory provisions.²⁴ The mere service of a garnishment under an execution is not a satisfaction precluding the subsequent issuance of an execution.²⁵

(b) Payment by Joint Debtor

Except as otherwise provided by statute, a joint debtor may not pay off the debt, take an assignment of the judgment, and collect it from his codebtors by execution.

Except where it is otherwise provided by statute,²⁶ one of several joint debtors against whom judgment has been obtained cannot pay off the debt, take an assignment of the judgment, and collect it from his codebtors by execution.²⁷ Hence, a guarantor, surety, or indorser who pays for the principal is not entitled to take out execution on the judgment against a cosurety, guarantor, or indorser,²⁸ or against the principal, in the absence of compliance with statutory provisions governing the right of the surety to the benefit of the judgment;²⁹ but this rule is limited to an ordinary judgment against several jointly, and does not apply where the judgment itself provides otherwise.³⁰

d. Vacating or Modifying Judgment

Execution cannot issue if the judgment is reversed, canceled, vacated, or annulled, but a mere modification will not prevent issuance.

Where a judgment is reversed,³¹ canceled,³² vacated or annulled, the execution falls with it.³³ Since, as stated in the C.J.S. title New Trial § 210, also 46 C.J. p 436 note 77 et seq, the effect of an order for new trial is to vacate the judgment, an execution cannot issue after a motion for new trial has been granted,³⁴ although the court may have acted illegally and erroneously.³⁵ Where a decree has been ordered opened for the purpose of a rehearing, an execution issued by the clerk of court should be perpetually stayed.³⁶ An order, on opening a default, that the judgment stand as security, prevents the issuance of an execution.³⁷ The opening of a default judgment to let in a meritorious defense does not affect the right to execution.³⁸ If the judgment is merely modified, the execution is controlled thereby only to the extent of the modification.³⁹ An attempt of a court, without jurisdiction, to amend a valid decree after term does not affect execution issued on the valid decree.⁴⁰

§ 12. Particular Forms of Writ

Writs for the enforcement of judgments are of various forms, and if there is a writ peculiarly applicable to the enforcement of a particular judgment it should be invoked. A special execution is one directing a levy on some particular property, while a general execution demands a levy on the debtor's property generally.

While if there is a writ peculiarly applicable to the enforcement of a judgment of a specific nature, it must be invoked by the creditor,⁴¹ yet on many judgments the creditor has an option as to the form of writ he may employ.⁴² So too certain writs have been more often invoked than others in different jurisdictions. On the other hand, some writs in use under the common law have been wholly or partially discarded by modern practice. In some jurisdictions statutes provide for executions in special cases,⁴³ or provide for the issuance of a writ for the purpose of enforcing a judgment directing a sale of property.⁴⁴

A feri facias, generally referred to as a fi. fa., is the process to enforce the collection of a claim which has gone to a judgment which has become final and executory.⁴⁵ In Pennsylvania, a feri facias is not the appropriate writ where specific lands only are to be sold,⁴⁶ although it is the appropriate writ on judgments in personam, followed by venditioni exponas if inquisition and condemnation are not waived.⁴⁷

A capias ad satisfaciendum, often called a ca. sa., is, as shown infra § 407, a writ authorizing the arrest of defendant and his imprisonment until the satisfaction of the demand against him.

Distringas is a form of execution in detinue and a command to distrain for a debt or appearance.⁴⁸

Writs of elegit and extent, the latter sometimes called extendi facias, are defined and considered infra § 403.

Levari facias is used in some jurisdictions to enforce a claim on the goods of a debtor and the profits of his land.⁴⁹ In Pennsylvania it is the common and proper process against land on judgments in rem.⁵⁰

A special execution is one that directs a levy on some special property, while a general execution is one that makes no such requirement but demands a levy on the debtor's property generally.⁵¹ A further distinction exists in the fact that ordinarily a special execution issues only in proceedings where defendant has not been brought into court by personal process, but his property has been seized.⁵² It is proper where the property has already been levied on by a writ of attachment,⁵³ or to enforce decrees in mortgage foreclosure proceedings.⁵⁴ A judgment creditor has no right to a special execution except in the cases expressly allowed by statute,⁵⁵ and in the absence of statute the court has no right to restrict plaintiff to a special execution.⁵⁶ The statutory right of the party in whose favor the writ is issued to elect on what property not exempt from execution he will have the same levied, does not give him a right to a special execution.⁵⁷ One reason why a special execution should not be issued

Execution and special execution compared

"Execution" is putting into effect of final judgment of court, and "special execution" is putting into effect judgment against particular property specified in decree.—Tice v. Tice, 224 N.W. 571, 572, 208 Iowa 145.

Provision for return not determining feature

Writ following form prescribed by statute for general feri facias is a "general execution," returnable only at next or second succeeding term of court, notwithstanding execution was returnable forthwith since such fact alone would not make writ a "special execution" which is distinguished from a "general execution" in that a "special execution" specifies property to be sold and follows judgment with respect to distribution of proceeds.—State ex rel. on an ordinary judgment in personam is that it would deprive the debtor of his right under the statute to point out property to be levied on.⁵⁸ On the other hand, where a special execution is the proper one to be issued, it has been held that general execution may not issue.⁵⁹ Thus if the action is commenced by attachment, and there is no personal service, the execution must be a special one against the property attached and no other,⁶⁰ even though the judgment is a general one;⁶¹ and even where the suit is in personam because of defendant's appearance, a special execution may issue.⁶² Generally, however, where the judgment is general, a special writ is improper.⁶³ A general execution issued to a sheriff who has seized property under an attachment is in effect a venditioni exponas, although not such in form.⁶⁴ In an attachment case, where there is both a personal judgment and a judgment of condemnation, a fieri facias may be issued on the personal judgment, and it is not necessary to issue a special writ against the property condemned.⁶⁵ A writ commanding the seizure and sale of specific property, issued irregularly instead of a general execution, may be set aside on motion; but if defendant makes no objection and permits a sale to be made under it, he will not be permitted thereafter to object that it is void.⁶⁶ So an execution against the goods generally of defendant is not void where the sale was of the attached goods only.⁶⁷ If the execution is general when it should be special, or special when it should be general, and the acts done thereunder are such only as were authorized by the judgment, the acts are valid.⁶⁸

Writ of restitution is a writ of execution where issued after a judgment requiring the payment of money and delivery of real property.⁶⁹

§ 13. Existence of or Resort to Other Remedy

While the judgment creditor may enforce his judgment by execution, he may adopt any method permitted by law for its collection, although in some cases he must elect between remedies.

The purpose of the issuance of execution is to obtain a more direct means of enforcement against the property of the debtor than that offered by proceedings to punish for contempt.⁷⁰ Where a valid judgment is unpaid, the creditor may adopt for its collection any method permitted by law,⁷¹ but in some cases he may be compelled to elect between remedies.⁷² It follows that the successful party on appeal, where money is deposited in lieu of the statutory bond on appeal, is not required as matter of law to resort to the fund instead of issuing execution.⁷³ The power to issue execution is inherent in the judgment, and the courts may not assume legislative power by providing other means of enforcement.⁷⁴ Execution statutes providing different methods of enforcement have been held to provide concurrent rather than exclusive remedies.⁷⁵

Action or execution. Statutes giving the right to an execution on judgments under conditions or circumstances where they could not issue at common law are cumulative only, and do not preclude the enforcement of the same by an action.⁷⁶ So too an execution and an action, not being inconsistent remedies, the one may be instituted, although the enforcement of the judgment is at the same time being sought by a use of the other.⁷⁷

Fieri facias or capias ad satisfaciendum. The creditor may choose between a body execution and one against property,⁷⁸ and of course a statute authorizing the issuing of a fieri facias does not prohibit a party from resorting to a capias ad satisfaciendum.⁷⁹

Attachment or execution. In some states a creditor may elect between an attachment on mesne process or execution,⁸⁰ but in some jurisdictions an execution should not issue after a levy on attachment, until the property attached has been legally disposed of.⁸¹ Acceptance of a bond given to prevent the levying of attachment does not deprive the attaching parties, subsequently obtaining a judgment, of the right to levy execution on the property of the debtor who gave the bond.⁸²

Enforcement of lien or execution. A pledgee may waive his right to sell pursuant to his lien and proceed by execution.⁸³

§ 14. Persons Entitled to Execution

- a. In general
- b. Assignees
- c. Joint creditors

a. In General

The person in whose favor a judgment is rendered, or those acting for him, have the exclusive right to and control of the issuance of execution and may order it at their option.

The right to execution is a substantial right,⁸⁴ and the rule is that the person in whose favor a judgment is rendered, or those acting for him, have the exclusive control of the issuance of an execution thereon and may order it at their option;⁸⁵ and the fact that plaintiff has, after rendition of the judgment, become an alien enemy does not alter the rule.⁸⁶ By virtue of statutes in some jurisdictions the permission of the court may under certain circumstances and conditions be necessary;⁸⁷ and, where it is sought to be issued by the personal representative of a deceased judgment plaintiff, the preliminary statutory requirements must be observed.⁸⁸ The equitable owner of a judgment may issue execution.⁸⁹ Where a statute authorizing execution to collect an order for payment of money permits the writ to be issued "by any person or party" to whom the money is made payable by the order, execution cannot issue where the money is required to be paid to an officer of the court.⁹⁰ A mortgagee having secured a money judgment on a note secured by a mortgage may have execution and collect his judgment the same as any judgment creditor.⁹¹ A judgment creditor is entitled to seize property to satisfy his judgment after agreement to assign, where the parties understand that the agreement is merely to sell, and is not a sale of the judgment;⁹² and an agreement whereby a judgment creditor authorized another to collect the judgment, which contained no words of grant or assignment, is not such an assignment of the judgment as will prevent the judgment creditor from having execution thereon.⁹³ A defendant is not entitled to an execution in favor of plaintiff against a codefendant.⁹⁴ Where the owner of personal property recovers a judgment for possession subject to a lien, the lienors are not entitled to execution.⁹⁵

Execution may be issued at the instance of the assignee of the judgment. In some jurisdictions it should be issued in the name of the assignor; but in others it may be issued in the name of the assignee or the assignor.

Execution may be issued at the instance of the assignee of the judgment,⁹⁶ provided there is a valid assignment,⁹⁷ although since an execution is but a proceeding under the judgment its validity is not affected by a mere irregularity in the assignment of the judgment.⁹⁸ Generally it is held that, inasmuch as the execution must conform to the judgment, the execution should be issued at the instance of the assignee in the name of the assignor,⁹⁹ although by virtue of statutory provisions or otherwise in some jurisdictions¹ if the assignment is filed,² or is evidenced by the act of a notary,³ or permission of the court is obtained,⁴ the execution may issue in the name of the assignee; and it has been held that in the absence of a statute to the contrary execution may be issued either in the name of the assignor or of the assignee.⁵ If an action is brought by an assignee of a chose in action in the name of the assignor, execution may be issued in the name of the assignor, under the direction of the assignee.⁶ The irregularity of issuing an execution in the name of the assignee of the judgment creditor does not make the writ subject to collateral attack.⁷ Where the rights which vest in an assignee of a judgment arise as a consequence of subrogation, and there is a disputed question of fact in respect of the equities claimed to exist in favor of the judgment debtor against the assignee, it has been held that it would be inequitable to permit the assignee to issue execution, since he has an adequate remedy by action for money paid by him or on the judgment, in which action the claimed equities could be asserted and adjusted.⁸ Where a judgment against a partnership is sold to a third person with subrogation to the judgment creditor's rights, a member of the partnership is not entitled to notice of subrogation before execution can issue against him, in the absence of a showing of payment to the original judgment creditor.⁹

The assignor is not entitled to take out an execution nor has he any right to control an execution issued by the assignee.¹⁰ However, where the assignor has expressly retained the right to issue execution, the execution may of course issue in his name, regardless of the assignment, and is in no way affected thereby.¹¹

Execution may issue in favor of one of several joint creditors.

Either of several joint judgment creditors may take out execution, without consulting the others, unless there is some agreement to the contrary.¹² If one of two joint plaintiffs dies, execution should,

on proper evidence of his death, be issued in favor of the survivor,¹³ unless the statute necessitates the substitution of his personal representatives;¹⁴ and where the damages adjudged in favor of several joint plaintiffs are several and distinct as to each of them, execution in favor of each may be issued on the judgment.¹⁵ Where judgment has been obtained by one of several minors in a suit on a bond, it has been held that the others may, by scire facias, have executions for the several amounts due them.¹⁶

§ 15. Persons against Whom Execution May Issue

In general execution may be issued against any party against whom a judgment may be rendered, but it cannot issue against one not a party to the action.

As a general rule, an execution may be issued against any party against whom a judgment may be rendered.¹⁷

As limited to parties. Since the execution must pursue and conform to the judgment, it follows that it can be issued only against the judgment debtor,¹⁸ and cannot be issued against one not a party¹⁹ even though he is interested in the judgment, or in fact the real party in interest in the suit.²⁰ If the parties to the action have appeared in a representative capacity execution must issue against them in that capacity,²¹ and vice versa.²² If in an action on a contract by a legal plaintiff for the use of plaintiff assignee a verdict and judgment against plaintiff on a counterclaim are general, execution can properly issue against whichever of the plaintiffs was legally responsible.²³

A mistake in the name of defendant, in the action in which judgment was rendered, precludes the issuing of an execution against the party intended, until the judgment is amended.²⁴

Including all parties. The rule that the execution must follow the judgment does not, however, necessitate the making of all the parties to a judgment parties to the execution; but, where the obligation devolves jointly and severally on judgment debtors, execution may be issued against a part of them only.²⁵ A fortiori, if separate judgments are rendered against different defendants, an execution issued against one of defendants alone is proper.²⁶ If the liability is several only, executions must issue severally against each of the debtors, although but one satisfaction can be had.²⁷

§ 16. Simultaneous and Successive Executions

- a. Simultaneous executions
- b. Successive executions

a. Simultaneous Executions

In general it may be stated that two executions should not issue on one judgment at the same time. Different species of execution may be sued out simultaneously, but only one at a time may be proceeded on. In a proper case, two writs may issue simultaneously on the same judgment in different counties.

Since it would be oppressive and against equity to carry on two executions at the same time, it has been held that two should not be issued at the same time on one judgment,²⁸ nor can a second execution be issued to the same county until a legal return and disposal of the first has been made.²⁹ It is well settled, however, that a party may sue out different species of execution at the same time on a judgment, but can proceed on but one of them at a time for the satisfaction of his debt,³⁰ and where different processes are served at the same time defendant may elect which shall stand, and the court may set aside the others,³¹ although it has been held that the objection to the irregularity of simultaneous issuance must come from defendant, and not his creditors.³² Two writs may, however, issue simultaneously on the same judgment to two different counties.³³ A mandatory statutory provision that only one execution shall be in existence at one time may be waived by the party for whose benefit it was enacted.³⁴ Where the statutes so provide, a judgment creditor is entitled to execution on each judgment obtained against defendant.³⁵

Successive executions may be issued where necessary for the proper satisfaction of the judgment.

The levy of an execution is not of itself a satisfaction of the judgment, and does not preclude a plaintiff from again resorting to this remedy if the fruits of the first levy are insufficient to satisfy his debt; his remedies are cumulative and he may successively sue out and levy writs until he reaches that point at which the law declares the debt to be satisfied,³⁶ and the institution of supplementary proceedings does not affect the right.³⁷ The issuance of a void execution does not operate as an abandonment of a prior execution.³⁸ It has been held, however, that a creditor has no absolute right to abandon a levy and issue a new execution without showing some necessity therefor.³⁹ Where the statutes so provide, a fieri facias can be issued while there is an execution against the body of defendant unreturned.⁴⁰ If an execution has been issued and returned satisfied, a second execution writ in a different form designed to collect the same judgment is properly quashed.⁴¹

§ 17. Agreement Not to Issue

A valid agreement not to issue or enforce execution may be made, and execution issued in violation of such an agreement may be set aside, or an action for damages may be brought.

Agreements not to issue execution or not to enforce an execution, in order to be binding, must be based on a valid consideration,⁴² and must be definite.⁴³ An execution issued in violation of an agreement that it should not be issued on the judgment therein within a specified time or on the non-compliance with certain conditions is voidable only and not absolutely void;⁴⁴ and hence it is the duty of the officer to comply with the same, and not presume to determine the conflicting rights of the parties thereto.⁴⁵ So too it may issue at once upon a noncompliance with conditions on which its suspension depends,⁴⁶ but where it is issued in violation of the agreement it will be set aside at the instance of defendant,⁴⁷ or an action for damages may be brought;⁴⁸ but it is held that an execution issued in violation of an agreement is not such a fraud on other creditors as will justify or require the setting aside of the same upon their application.⁴⁹ Where the parties agree that no execution shall issue until certain questions are decided by the appellate court in another case pending on appeal, no execution can issue until the case is finally ruled on by the appellate court.⁵⁰

Waiver of agreement. A motion in arrest of judgment or for a new trial is a waiver of the benefit of a stay of execution agreed on by the parties.⁵¹

II. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EXECUTION

§ 18. • In General

Generally every kind of property or interest therein not otherwise exempt by statute may be reached by an execution issued on a judgment.

There being no exemptions at common law,⁵² it has been said to be a general principle of the common law that all of a person's assets are liable for the payment of his debts,⁵³ although certain types of property have been declared to be absolved from seizure on the ground of broad public policy.⁵⁴ Usually, however, what property is subject to seizure and sale under an execution is determined by the applicable statutes,⁵⁵ it being within the power of the legislature, subject to constitutional restrictions, to authorize the levy and sale of any and every kind of property.⁵⁶

In some jurisdictions constitutional provisions have been construed as contemplating that all of a debtor's property of whatsoever kind shall be subject to execution except property exempted by general laws,⁵⁷ and this is declared to be the public policy in other jurisdictions.⁵⁸

In many jurisdictions under the prevailing statutes, sometimes without regard or reference to statute, every kind of property or interest therein,

if not otherwise exempt, may be reached on execution,⁵⁹ the liability of property for the owner's debts being said to be as unlimited as his power of disposition thereof when there is no legal disability.⁶⁰ Under some statutes any property or interest therein which is subject to alienation or assignment may be seized and sold under an execution.⁶¹

Execution statutes must be construed in pari materia with exemption statutes.⁶² Statutes permitting execution against specified kinds of property must be liberally construed for the benefit of the creditors.⁶³

Inasmuch as property which is subject to attachment is also subject to execution and vice versa, unless otherwise provided by statute, reference should be made to Attachment §§ 71-90.

Statutory exemptions are discussed in the C.J.S. titles Exemptions §§ 26-69, also 25 C.J. p 42 note 57-p 93 note 64, and Homesteads §§ 52-92, also 29 C.J. p 821 note 75-p 855 note 2.

§ 19. Personal Property in General

a. General rule

b. Wearing apparel or other property on person of debtor

a. General Rule

Personal property which may be described as chattels is usually subject to seizure under an execution unless exempt by statute.

It has been said that at common law and under statute all of the personal estate of a debtor is subject to execution.⁶⁷ Generally speaking, however, any species of personal property properly described as a chattel is subject to execution, statutes expressly or in effect frequently so providing,⁶⁸ provided it is not exempted by statute, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Exemptions §§ 26-69, also 25 C.J. p 42 note 57-p 93 note 64, and provided it is in esse at the time of the levy and sale,⁶⁹ and is a vested interest at the time of the levy.⁷⁰ Stated otherwise, all kinds of personal property of the debtor which he can make the subject of a voluntary transfer of title can by execution be made the subject of an involuntary transfer.⁷¹ In some jurisdictions it is said that in the absence of statute, the right to seize and sell is coextensive only with the power to take and deliver possession.⁷²

It is sometimes stated that only property which may be sold may be taken on an execution but this is not universally true since, as discussed infra § 24, an execution may be levied on money.⁷³

A perpetual scholarship granted to a person by a college in recognition of his gifts to it, authorizing him to place and keep therein one pupil without charge is not subject to execution.⁷⁴

Effect of subsequent sale. Property sold after the lien of an execution has attached is nevertheless subject to the writ.⁷⁵

A liquor tax certificate or license, although personal property, is not a chattel but an intangible right which is not subject to execution.⁷⁶

Vehicles carrying United States mail. A vehicle or boat is not exempt from execution because it plies on a mail route and is used to convey mail.⁷⁷

b. Wearing Apparel or Other Property on Person of Debtor

Personal property on the person of the debtor such as wearing apparel is not subject to seizure on execution unless means are available for enforcement of the execution without risk of personal conflict or breach of peace.

On the theory that a contrary rule would authorize an officer to commit a trespass on the person of defendant and thereby provoke a breach of the peace, it has been held that property on the person of defendant cannot be seized on execution.⁷⁸ However, this rule has been held not to extend to property held in defendant's hand,⁷⁹ or to a horse which he is riding,⁸⁰ or as to property habitually worn by the debtor if procedure for enforcement without risk of personal conflict or breach of the peace is available.⁸¹

Wearing apparel. Even in the absence of statute, it has been held that the necessary wearing apparel of a debtor is exempt from levy and sale on execution, on grounds of justice and public policy,⁸² and this is particularly true while such apparel is being worn by the judgment debtor.⁸³

Rings and jewelry have been held not to be wearing apparel, and hence are liable to be taken on execution,⁸⁴ if appropriate procedure for enforcement without risk of personal conflict and breach of the peace is available.⁸⁵

As it may be out of the power of the sheriff to levy on, or take possession of, them, since they are usually worn on the person, a receiver may be appointed, and an order made for their delivery to him.⁸⁶

§ 20. Crops, Trees, and Fruits

- a. Emblements or fructus industriales
- b. Fructus Naturales

a. Emblements or Fructus Industriales

At common law, and under some statutes, a growing crop is subject to execution regardless of its state of maturity. Statutes in some jurisdictions restrict execution to matured crops or even to crops which have been cut and gathered.

At common law, and generally in the United States, sometimes by reason of statute, all annual crops which are raised by yearly manurance and labor, and essentially owe their annual existence to cultivation by man, termed "emblements," defined in Crops § 4, and sometimes "fructus industriales," defined in Crops § 3, irrespective of their state of maturity, may be levied on as personal property under an execution.⁸⁷ However, in several jurisdictions, sometimes by reason of statute, execution levies are restricted to mature crops and are not allowed as to unripe crops or as to growing crops not in a fit state to be gathered.⁸⁸

crops are subject to levy and sale under execution, although exempt from seizure prior to October 1st, unless severed.—Burley Tobacco Growers' Co-op. Ass'n v. City of Carrollton, 270 S.W. 749, 208 Ky. 270.

23 C.J. p 329 note 62.

Reason for rule

"Growing, immature crops, which need the substance of the earth perhaps for months before they are of real value to any one, are not, from their nature, susceptible of being taken possession of under execution, and that possession transferred to a purchaser at an execution sale."—Danville State Bank v. May, 271 P. 302, 304, 126 Kan. 714.

Statutory limitations on rule

Under some statutes immature crops cannot be levied on separately from land, except where debtor absconds or removes from county or state.—Barnesville Bank v. Ingram, 129 S.E. 112, 34 Ga.App. 269.

The statutes, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed.⁸⁹ Under some statutes a crop that has matured and is ready for harvest is subject to execution,⁹⁰ while under others it is necessary that the crop be gathered before it can be so reached.⁹¹

The statutory right of the mortgagor to possession of mortgaged land during the redemption period does not prevent enforcement of an execution against the mortgagor on a crop grown, cut, and threshed during such period.⁹²

Crops raised on leased lands. Unless the landlord and tenant are tenants in common of the crop, the share of the former cannot be levied on until the crop has been divided.⁹³

Interest of cropper. By analogy a cropper has no such interest in the crop as can be the subject of execution and sale while it remains en masse, since until a division is made the whole crop is the property of the landlord.⁹⁴

Interest of tenant. Where land is leased for a share of the crops to be raised, division to be made after such crops are gathered, the title to the whole of the crops raised is in the tenant until a division is made and possession given to the landlord of his share, and prior to such division the levy of an execution on such crops in satisfaction of a judgment against the tenant is good.⁹⁵ If, however, the interest of the tenant is not assignable, either because of express prohibition in the lease or by operation of law, a growing crop is not subject to execution in favor of the tenant's creditors.⁹⁶ Where the tenant is to pay a part of the property in kind, and he delivers a part of it to the landlord, such part cannot be levied on as the property of the tenant.⁹⁷

Interest of tenants in common. Where the owner and the occupant of land agree jointly to cultivate and divide the products of such land, such contract creates between them a tenancy in common in the products, and the share of either the owner or the occupant is liable to seizure and sale under execution against him.⁹⁸ However, the whole property cannot be sold on an execution against one cotenant only.⁹⁹

b. Fructus Naturales

Perennial plants and their ungathered products, considered incident to the soil, are not subject to execution as personal property.

Perennial plants and their ungathered product, such as trees, bushes, grasses, timber, fruits, etc., are incident to the soil and not subject to execution as personal property.¹ This includes unpicked blackberries² and peaches on trees,³ al-

Test of maturity

(1) When crops have ceased to draw sustenance from the land, they become personalty for purpose of levy and sale.—Barnesville Bank v. Ingram, 129 S.E. 112, 113, 34 Ga.App. 269.

(2) "As to crops, such as cotton, which do not mature on the stalk at one time, but whose maturity is extended throughout the latter portion of the growing season, and where, in order to preserve that which has first matured, it is necessary to harvest it prior to the maturity of those portions of the crop which mature later, the rational construction of the statute would be, not that a levy must needs be deferred until the last gathering or remnant is ready to be harvested, and the bulk of the crop has been allowed to deteriorate, be wasted, or misapplied, but that the crop is subject to levy, and to be taken charge of by the levying officer to be gathered, whenever it has reached that stage of maturity when it is ready for harvesting to commence."—Barnesville Bank v. Ingram, supra.

though as to the latter there is authority to the contrary.⁴

The test as to whether the unsevered product is an emblem, and as such personal property, is not entirely whether it is produced chiefly by the manurance and industry of the owner, since under modern improved methods nearly all fruits are cultivated, but the manner, as well as the purpose of planting, is an essential element to be taken into consideration. If the tree, bush, or vine requires to be planted but once, and will then bear successive crops for years, the planting would naturally be calculated to permanently enhance the value of the land itself, and the product of any one year could not be said to essentially owe its existence to labor expended during that year, and hence it would be classed among fructus naturales.⁵

Hops on the vines are a possible exception to this classification, and have been held to be subject to sale as personal chattels on the theory that, although the roots are perennial, the vines die yearly, and the crop from the new vines is wholly or mainly dependent on annual cultivation.⁶

§ 21. Fixtures

Whether fixtures are subject to execution as personal property depends on the nature of the fixture, as being removable or otherwise, and is discussed in the C.J.S. title Fixtures §§ 54-57, also 26 C.J. p 730 note 17—p 732 note 31.

Approval of utility commission

While a franchise to operate autobuses constitutes "rights and credits" which may be levied on and sold on execution, the sale is subject to utility commissioners' approval.—Hart v. Seacoast Credit Corporation, supra.

Special writ of fieri facias

The special writ of fieri facias given by statute under which the franchises of a corporation can be sold can issue only after the personal property subject to the ordinary process of execution has been exhausted, and there has been a return of nulla bona of the writ.—Reynolds v. Reynolds Lumber Co., 32 A. 537, 169 Pa. 626, 47 Am.S.R. 935—Appeal of Philadelphia & B. C. R. Co., 70 Pa. 355—Valle v. Arnold Electric Mfg. Co., 17 Pa.Co. 38, 6 Del.Co. 69—Second Nat. Bank v. Gibbs & Sterrett Mfg. Co., 2 Del.Co. 81, 13 Wkly.N.C. 174.

A franchise, being an incorporeal hereditament, cannot, on the settled principles of the common law, in the absence of statute, be seized and sold under a fieri facias or execution.⁷ Many statutes exist, however, which either directly or indirectly subject franchises, and property appurtenant thereto, held by individuals and corporations, to execution in satisfaction of judgments recovered against the owners thereof.⁸

Statutes making corporate franchises subject to execution have been construed as referring to the special or secondary franchises of the corporation,⁹ and not to authorize a levy on the primary franchise to exist and do business as a corporation.¹⁰ The term "franchise," in this connection, is also limited to grant of rights or privileges by public, or quasi public, authority, and does not include rights possessed by virtue of private contract, such as an Associated Press franchise to receive news service.¹¹ So an exclusive right to construct and operate specified utilities in streets and alleys reserved by the owner of the fee on dedication of the streets and alleys to the public without transfer of the fee is not subject to execution, as personalty in the nature of a franchise.¹²

As such statutes are in derogation of the common law, their provisions must be strictly complied with in order to make the levy and sale valid.¹³

§ 23. Intoxicating Liquors

Where a statute regulating or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor destroys the right of property therein, it is not subject to execution. The authorities are not in accord as to the effect of a statute merely regulating or prohibiting the sale of such property.

On the ground that intoxicating liquors are property, and that they are not within any enumerated exception or exemption, it has been held that they are subject to levy and sale under execution on the same basis as any other property notwithstanding the existence of statutes regulating or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, execution sales not being deemed within the prohibition of such statutes.¹⁴ However, there is authority to the contrary, some courts holding broadly that such prohibitory statutes render intoxicating liquors not subject to levy and sale on execution.¹⁵ Where the applicatory statute does not merely regulate or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor, but absolutely destroys the right of property therein, it is not subject to execution sale.¹⁶

Money is generally considered as subject to execution if in the possession of the debtor or capable of being identified as his property.

The rule is well established that money, whether in specie or bank notes, which are treated civiliter as money, if in the possession of defendant, or capable of being identified as his property, may be taken in execution,¹⁷ provided, it is sometimes held, no trespass is committed in making the levy,¹⁸ statutes sometimes so providing,¹⁹ and in some instances providing also that money taken in execution need not be sold, but may be placed as payment on the execution.²⁰

So long as such money is not paid over to the judgment creditor, there is not such title to the money in the judgment creditor as would, previous to its delivery to him, enable the officer to seize it as his property.²¹

Where money is deposited in a bank, it becomes the property of the bank and merely creates an indebtedness on the part of the latter, and therefore no specific fund can be levied on it while in the hands of the bank.²²

§ 25. Patents, Copyrights or Literary Property, Trade-Marks, Etc.

While the physical property itself which has been copyrighted or patented is subject to seizure on an execution, in the absence of statute the copyright or patent right is not property so subject.

Patent rights²³ and copyrights²⁴ have no corporeal, tangible substance and, in the absence of statute, are not subject to seizure and sale by execution. The material thing itself on which the incorporeal right has been obtained, that is, the patented or copyrighted article, is, however, subject to execution.²⁵

Invention before patenting. The conception of an invention so long as it is not patented is not property which can be taken in execution,²⁶ unless some trust or contract relation exists.²⁷

Unpublished manuscripts. The decisions are conflicting as to whether or not unpublished manuscripts, or the like, are subject to levy and sale on execution, the question being affected by the peculiar nature of common-law rights in unpublished intellectual productions. Some courts hold that since the law will not permit the right of the owner to publish it or keep it back from publication to be interfered with, except as he chooses to make it public, an unpublished manuscript cannot be seized and sold on execution;²⁸ but this doctrine has been criticized by other authorities, and unpublished manuscripts, considered as physical property, have been held subject to seizure and sale on execution.²⁹

The mere good will of a business apart from the control of premises is not subject to seizure and sale under an execution.³⁰

A trade-mark, by itself, is not subject to execution, because a trade-mark cannot be sold or assigned apart from the good will of the business in which it has been used.³¹

Trade secrets, contained in an envelope, have been held subject to execution.³²

§ 26. Membership or Seat in Stock Exchange

A seat or membership in an exchange has been held not subject to seizure under an execution, although more generally it has been held to be property which can be so reached by creditors.

It has been held in some jurisdictions that a seat or membership on an exchange is not such property as can be seized in execution for the debts of the members, it being the mere creation of the board, to be held and enjoyed with all the limitations and restrictions which the constitution of the board choose to put on it.³³ More generally, however, a seat or membership on a stock exchange is regarded as property, and subject to execution in the sense that it may be reached by appropriate proceedings and applied, as other property of a debtor, to the payment of his just debts,³⁴ such as by a creditors' suit, as discussed in Creditors' Suits § 34, or by supplementary proceedings, as discussed infra § 349.

§ 27. Wages and Salaries

While usually subject to garnishment or special execution, salaries or wages sometimes are reached by ordinary execution if not within the statutory exemptions.

While wages and salaries may ordinarily be reached by garnishment proceedings, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Garnishment § 115, also 28 C.J. p 170 note 70, statutes exist under which wages or salaries may be seized on execution,³⁵ a special form of execution and procedure, considered infra § 406, being sometimes provided. However, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Exemptions §§ 47-50, also 25 C.J. p 63 note 72-p 72 note 39, statutory exemptions from execution, or other compulsory process, frequently include wages and salaries.

Public officers. On grounds of public policy it is generally held that the salary or compensation of public officers and employees is not subject to execution, except under the authority of a statute broad enough to include them.³⁶

§ 28. Choses in Action

Generally, a chose in action is subject to execution only when made so by some authorizing statute.

Choses in action are subject to execution only when made so by statute, or are voluntarily given up to be sold on execution.³⁷

Personal injuries

A cause of action for personal injuries has been held not subject to execution because not such a chose in action as could be classified as "personal property."—Baker v. Tullock, 77 P.2d 1035, 106 Mont. 375—

97, also 28 C.J. p 150 note 29—p 151 note 53, in many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted by which the choses in action of the debtor may be reached by process of garnishment, and where this is the only method provided, the chose in action cannot be reached by levy and sale under general execution.³⁸ However, in some jurisdictions, by express statutory authority, all choses in action of a debtor may be levied on and sold under execution against him in the same manner as other personal property,³⁹ or under a special form of execution, discussed infra § 406. Notwithstanding such statutes, there are choses in action which from their intangible character seem to be incapable of being made the subject of direct levy and sale.⁴⁰

Debts. Debts due or owing to the judgment debtor have been held subject to execution under statutes expressly so providing,⁴¹ under statutes making all property so subject,⁴² and under statutes providing for execution against rights and credits,⁴³ and this although a debt is not capable of being physically taken into possession by the levying officer, constructive possession obtained by notice of the levy being sufficient in such case.⁴⁴

An accruing debt is included in some of these statutes.⁴⁵

Certainty as a requirement. To be subject to execution under the statutes, it has been held that the right, credit, or debt must be liquidated and certain,⁴⁶ an unliquidated or uncertain and contingent debt, in the sense that it may never become payable, not being subject to levy and sale.⁴⁷

§ 29. — Bills, Notes and Other Evidences of Indebtedness

Ordinarily express statutory authority is necessary for seizure and sale under execution of instruments for payment of money or other evidence of indebtedness.

Instruments and securities for the payment of money, such as bonds and promissory notes, are not the subject of seizure and sale under execution in the absence of express statutory authority,⁴⁸ es-

Intent of statute

Existence of other remedy

Under the California statutes, a judgment creditor could proceed by execution against debtors' causes of action, pending in trial court, notwithstanding that such claims might also have been reached and controlled on proceedings supplementary to execution.—Everts v. Will S. Fawcett Co., 74 P.2d 815, 24 Cal.App.2d 213.

Claim against county

A deputy sheriff's claim against county for mileage, pursuant to deputy's agreement with sheriff by which sums to be paid for mileage accrued in connection with services of deputy were property of deputy, was subject to levy under execution issued on judgment against deputy, notwithstanding that, under the law, only sheriff might be able to assert claim against county, and that county had no knowledge of agreement, which was made before execution was issued.—De Forest v. Cascade County, Mont., 120 P.2d 425.

Claim for breach of contract

(1) Generally.—Meserve v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 38 P.2d 453, 2 Cal.App.2d 468.

(2) Term "other things in action," in statute respecting execution, includes claim for breach of contract.—Brenton Bros. v. Dorr, 239 N.W. 808, 213 Iowa 725.

(3) In such case, the judgment creditor may levy execution on his own claimed indebtedness to judgment debtor for contract breach.—Brenton Bros. v. Dorr, supra.

Legal interest in property

Subject to statutory exception, in so far as legal interests are concerned, the statute makes most property rights, whether real or personal, subject to execution, although the precise right or interest of defendant is unknown to both plaintiff and attaching officer at time of seizure and sale.—Woods v. Spoturno, 183 A. 319, 7 W.W.Harr., Del., 295, reversed on other grounds Spoturno v. Woods, 192 A. 689, 8 W.W.Harr. 378.

pecially after transfer by defendant,⁴⁹ although where the debtor voluntarily turns over to the sheriff a note with the intention that it should be held subject to the execution, the officer may hold it and insist on his lien thereon, although a note is not a subject of levy on execution.⁵⁰ However, in many jurisdictions by virtue of statute, promissory notes and other evidences of debt are subject to seizure and sale under execution.⁵¹ To be subject to seizure and sale, however, actual issuance and delivery of the instrument by its maker is essential,⁵² so a county warrant before delivery to the payee thereof is not subject to levy under an execution against the payee.⁵³

The unissued notes or bonds of a party in his possession and control do not, however, constitute a part of his property or assets, and are not liable to sale under execution against him.⁵⁴

§ 30. — Interests under Insurance Policies

Statutory authority must exist to subject insured's interest in a policy of insurance to execution.

Where it is not otherwise provided by statute, the interest of insured in a fire or life policy, being a mere chose in action, is not subject to execution.⁵⁵ Such an interest, however, has been held to be a property right which a creditor ordinarily can reach and apply.⁵⁶

Where it is considered that every specie of property is subject to execution, money due insured on a disability health policy is subject to execution in absence of any statute exempting it.⁵⁷

Under statutes making rights and credits subject to execution, a claim under an insurance policy must be liquidated and certain to be reachable on execution.⁵⁸

Interest of beneficiary. An agreement between the beneficiary and insurer of a life policy for installment payment of the proceeds of the policy, insurer to pay to no one except the beneficiary, or on his order for each payment as it became due, is not a restriction against assignment by operation of law and does not preclude a levy on a payment thereafter becoming due before return of the execution.⁵⁹

Statutory exemption of life insurance is considered in the C.J.S. title Exemptions §§ 39-42, also 25 C.J. p 72 note 41-p 77 note 21.

§ 31. — Judgments

strictly followed,⁶¹ judgments have been made subject to execution,⁶² although a statute authorizing a general execution against goods and chattels does not modify the common-law rule.⁶³

In many jurisdictions which by statute allow choses in action to be subjected to execution, a judgment may be the subject of levy and sale as a credit or chose in action.⁶⁴ Some courts, however, in construing the statutes relative to choses in action, have reached the conclusion that a judgment cannot be levied on and sold, but can only be subjected by process of garnishment,⁶⁵ as discussed in the C.J.S. title Garnishment § 117, also 28 C.J. p 188 note 27—p 189 note 42. So a statute providing a method of reaching the interest of a judgment creditor by a creditors' bill, as discussed in Creditors' Suits § 11, or by supplementary proceedings, as discussed infra § 349, has been held not to be authority for a levy under a general execution.⁶⁶

A judgment creditor cannot levy on a judgment against himself held by the judgment debtor.⁶⁷

Alimony. While it has been held that creditors of a divorcee may reach sums due her under an alimony award,⁶⁸ it has also been held that an alimony judgment is not a "debt" which can be taken in favor of preëxisting judgment creditors.⁶⁹

Pending appeal from a judgment in a tort action, the judgment or obligation which it represents is not subject to levy under an execution.⁷⁰

§ 32. — Shares of Stock

Statutory authority is necessary to authorize seizure and sale of shares of corporate stock under a general execution.

At common law, and in the absence of any statute changing the rule, corporate shares are deemed to be mere choses in action, and hence not subject to levy and sale on execution.⁷¹ Even though the shares of a certain corporation are declared to be real estate by the incorporating act, for the purpose of rendering them inheritable, the shares are not thereby made liable to seizure and sale under a fieri facias.⁷² The rule of the common law, however, has been changed by statute in many of the states, and shares of stock have been made subject to execution to the extent, and in the manner, specified in such statute.⁷³

It is not necessary that the statute shall expressly mention shares of stock. If it uses terms clearly showing an intention to include such property, it will be given effect accordingly. Thus shares of stock would clearly be included under the term "choses in action,"⁷⁴ and they have been held to be included under the terms "estates,"⁷⁵ and have been held included under the terms "rights,"⁷⁶ "effects,"⁷⁷ and "rights and credits."⁷⁸ There are cases, however, in which the statutes are more strictly construed, and in which shares of stock have been held not to be included under the phrase "real and personal property," or "estate, both real and personal,"⁷⁹ or goods and chattels.⁸⁰

The remedy cannot be extended so as to apply to corporations other than those within the provisions of the statute.⁸¹

Under some statutes shares of stock are subject to levy and sale under an execution only where there has been a prior valid attachment against such shares.⁸² Corporate stock as subject to execution against the corporation see Corporations § 1342 a.

Debtor's title or interest. While, as a general rule, the statutes allow an execution to be levied on any stock held by the judgment debtor,⁸³ an execution cannot be levied against stock held by the debtor in a fiduciary relation where the execution runs against him individually,⁸⁴ nor, on an execution against a stockholder, can there be a levy on shares pledged as collateral security for a debt of the stockholder and transferred on the books of the company to the pledgee.⁸⁵ The statute applies, however, although a third person has a lien on the stock,⁸⁶ or although the stockholders have agreed to pool their stock.⁸⁷

A by-law of the corporation prohibiting the transfer of stock by a stockholder while he is indebted to it does not prevent a levy on and sale of the stock of one so indebted.⁸⁸

Transfer on corporate books. Statutes authorizing execution against stock held by the judgment debtor do not authorize a levy of execution on stock not owned by the judgment debtor, although standing in his name on the books of the corporation,⁸⁹ unless the actual owner is estopped to deny the apparent ownership.⁹⁰ On the other hand, where statute renders void a transfer of stock not entered on the stock books, execution cannot be levied on the right of a purchaser of a stock certificate the transfer of which was not entered on the stock books.⁹¹ Stock given as security or pledge to another but not transferred on the books in accord with the statute is subject to execution issued on a judgment against the record owner of the stock.⁹²

Foreign corporations or joint stock companies. In the absence of statute, the stock of a foreign corporation is not subject to execution.⁹³ Statutes making corporate stock subject to execution apply only to the stock of domestic corporations,⁹⁴ including foreign corporations which have become domesticated.⁹⁵ However, it has been held that certificates of stock in a foreign corporation are personal property, which if physically within the state may be levied on and sold pursuant to statute,⁹⁶ and a like rule has been applied to certificates of shares of joint stock associations and partnerships.⁹⁷

the seizure or sale under the state law of stock in a national bank.⁹⁸ Such stock has been held to be included in statutes authorizing execution against stock in corporations generally,⁹⁹ and may be sold on execution where such sale does not interfere with the operation of the bank as a governmental agency.¹

The situs of shares of stock is within the state under whose laws the corporation was organized, and they may be there levied on, although owned by a nonresident, statutes sometimes so providing.²

§ 33. Real Property in General

In most jurisdictions real property or interests therein are subject to execution, if not otherwise exempt.

The liability of realty to levy and sale on execution depends entirely on statute,³ such liability being unknown at common law.⁴ Under the statutes of most jurisdictions, however, the real property of a judgment debtor or any interest therein, if not otherwise exempt, is subject to seizure and sale under an execution.⁵ This rule is not universal, however, and in some states real property is not subject to execution,⁶ while in others real property is not primarily liable,⁷ it being provided that personalty of the debtor shall be first exhausted before the realty may be seized on execution, as discussed infra § 100. A bill in equity to subject the realty to satisfaction of the judgment is sometimes the only remedy.⁸

Where judgment not a lien. It has been held that real estate may be levied on and sold under an execution, even though no lien existed on such property prior to the levy.⁹ Thus, where a judgment is not a lien on after-acquired realty, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Judgments § 477, also 34 C.J. p 590 note 45, such realty may be seized under execution and sold in satisfaction of the judgment.¹⁰

§ 34. Property of Corporations

As a general rule, the property of private corporations is as much subject to seizure and sale under an execution as is the property of natural persons.

As discussed in Corporations § 1342 a, as a general rule, the property of all private corporations is as much subject to execution as is the property of natural persons. So the property of a corporation which, as agent of the state, is performing a duty which devolves on the state, such as caring for the insane, may be sold under execution, although the state will be affected thereby, provided the sale will not render the corporation unable to perform its duty.¹¹

However, it has been held that the property of a charitable organization, strictly dedicated to the charity, is not subject to execution.¹² So the property of a public or quasi public corporation devoted to public use or necessary to the exercise of its franchise, is generally held not subject to execution, as discussed infra § 35.

§ 35. Property of Public or Quasi Public Corporations

- a. In general
- b. Property essential to enjoyment of franchise

a. In General

Ordinarily the property of a public or quasi public corporation devoted to public or governmental, as distinguished from private or quasi private, purposes is not subject to seizure under an execution.

It is considered general doctrine needing no statutory sanction that the land and property of the state or its agencies or political subdivisions is not subject to seizure under general execution in the absence of statute expressly granting such right, statutes sometimes so providing,¹³ and it has been said that, as a matter of public policy, general statutory provisions making property subject to execution are construed to apply only to the property of private persons and corporations, and not to that of public corporations or bodies politic.¹⁴ Apart from the foregoing, it is said that where property of a public or quasi public corporation is sought to be subjected to execution to satisfy judgments recovered against such corporation, the question as to whether such property is leviable or not is to be determined by the usage and purposes for which it is held.¹⁵ Thus property held for public uses, such as public buildings, streets, squares, parks, promenades, wharves, landing places, fire engines, hose and hose carriages, engine houses, public markets, hospitals, cemeteries, and generally everything held for governmental purposes, is not subject to levy and sale under execution against such corporation, statutes sometimes so providing.¹⁶

Drainage district

(1) Property and taxes necessary for use of drainage district in performing governmental functions

Where, however, such a corporation owns in its proprietary, as distinguished from its public or governmental, capacity property not useful or used for a public purpose but for quasi private purposes, the general rule is that such property may be seized and sold under execution against the corporation, precisely as similar property of individuals is seized and sold.¹⁷ Property held for public purposes is not subject to execution merely because it is temporarily used for private purposes,¹⁸ although if the public use is wholly abandoned it becomes subject to execution.¹⁹ Whether or not property held as public property is necessary for the public use is a political, rather than a judicial, question.²⁰

The rule absolving property devoted to public purposes from execution also applies to funds in the hands of a public officer,²¹ or to taxes due the public as a quasi public corporation.²²

State agencies distinguished. A distinction has been made with respect to the property of state agencies, such as irrigation or reclamation districts, it being considered that property of such agencies is held only for governmental purposes and as such cannot be seized on execution.²³

Proceeds of exempt property. Proceeds of property which is not subject to execution have been held to be equally free from seizure.²⁴ Thus, if public property not subject to execution is destroyed, the insurance money stands in lieu thereof and cannot be reached by execution.²⁵

Property held under public trust. Property held subject to a public trust cannot be subjected to an execution.²⁶

b. Property Essential to Enjoyment of Franchise

Except as, and to the extent that, statutory or constitutional provisions provide otherwise, property of a quasi public corporation essential to the operation of its franchise is ordinarily not subject to execution.

Except where, and to the extent that, it is otherwise provided by statutory or constitutional provision,²⁷ in the case of corporations such as railroads, bridge companies, or the like, which, al-may not legally be taken from district pursuant to writ of execution—State by and through State Land Board v. Blake, 20 P.2d 871, 88 Utah 584, modified on other grounds 56 P.2d 1347, 88 Utah 600.

Property acquired by tax deed

Statute declaring that property acquired by irrigation district shall be held in trust for the uses and purposes of the statute governing irrigation districts makes lands acquired by district by tax deed exempt from execution.—El Camino Irr. though not strictly public corporations, are created to serve public purposes, and are charged with public duties, such property as is necessary to enable them to discharge their duties to the public and effectuate the objects of their incorporation is not, according to the weight of authority, apart from statutory provision, subject to execution at law,²⁸ although in some jurisdictions the tendency has been not to exempt corporate property from execution and sale, even where such property is essential to the enjoyment of the franchise owned by such corporation.²⁹ However, the property of a quasi public corporation not necessary or not used for the purposes which called the corporation into being is not exempt from seizure and sale under execution.³⁰ This principle is not applicable to lands held by a public corporation under an express trust where a sale of the land could not be made without doing violation to the terms of the trust.³¹

So if the corporation is purely private, and the public has no direct interest in its operations or rights concerning them, its property, although useful and necessary to the conduct of its business, may be sold under execution the same as the property of an individual.³²

It is not sufficient to exempt the property of a corporation from execution that it receives a government subsidy or was formed to perform service of a public nature or in which the public is directly or indirectly interested, or is engaged in performing service for the government, where there is no duty imposed on the corporation requiring its performance of public service or any grant of a public franchise authorizing the taking of private property for public use, whereby property taken is stamped with a public trust.³³

Omission from exemption statute immaterial

Statute exempting from execution property used by counties, cities and towns, under maxim "inclusio unius est exclusio alterius," could not be construed to exclude from exemption, property devoted to public use by authority of the state, where it would lead to absurdity.—Ackroyd v. Winston Bros. Co., C.C.A.Mont., 113 F.2d 657, remanding, D.C., Ackroyd v. Brady Irr. Co., 27 F.Supp. 503.

Part of property

Except where otherwise provided by statute, it is a general rule that the property of a railroad company may be levied on and sold as an entirety where the necessity arises, but that parts or parcels thereof, a levy on which would affect the operation of the road as a whole, cannot be taken separately, in view of the doctrine that for no class of creditors should the indispensable means of operating a railroad be taken away until the final sale of the entire road becomes necessary. Any presumption that property belonging to drainage district is for public use so as to render it exempt from execution may be rebutted.—Keith v. Drainage Dist. No. 7 of Poinsett County, 38 S.W.2d 755, 183 Ark. 786.

Reservoir company

The property of a reservoir company which furnished water to landowners in an irrigation district which owned majority of stock of the reservoir company was not subject to execution by construction company which enlarged reservoir and obtained judgment against the reservoir company for work done, not because of district's ownership of stock but because the supplying of water to landowners of irrigation district was public service.—Ackroyd v. - d. Executory devises
- e. Life estates
- f. Estates for years
- g. Estates at will or sufferance
- h. Rents reserved to grantor
- i. Interest of licensee

a. In General

Generally every possible interest in land which is real and substantial and which can be sold by the debtor is subject to seizure on an execution.

The general rule is that all possible interests in land, contingent or otherwise, which are real and substantial, are subject to seizure and sale on execution.³⁷ Mere expectancies, however, such as that of an heir apparent, are not included,³⁸ the rule here being analogous to that governing assignments of like interests, discussed in Assignments § 14.

The estate or interest subject to execution has been characterized in variant terms, such as every "vested interest,"³⁹ "every legal interest,"⁴⁰ "lands, tenements, and hereditaments,"⁴¹ "a descendible, devisable and alienable" estate.⁴²

A mere possession, see infra § 51, or a tenancy at will, discussed infra subdivision g of this section, and even a mere easement⁴³ has been held to be subject to sale on execution. Generally, however, if the debtor has no such interest in land as he himself can sell, he has no interest which is leviable.⁴⁴

An estate in land determinable on the debtor's ceasing for any reason to remain in possession is too intangible to be subject to execution.⁴⁵

Curtesy as an estate or interest subject to execution is considered in Curtesy §§ 18, 19; dower as such an estate is considered in Dower §§ 76, 112; while an estate by entirety as such an interest is considered in the C.J.S. title Husband and Wife § 34, also 30 C.J. p 572 note 84—p 574 note 2.

Ground rents. The interest of a grantor or lessor in a ground rent may be levied on and sold under an execution.⁴⁶

Mere contingent interests or remote possibilities cannot be levied on under an execution.⁴⁷

b. Remainders

Vested remainders in both realty and personalty are generally subject to seizure under an execution. There is a disagreement as to contingent remainders.

The doctrine is well established that a vested estate in remainder is subject to levy and sale under execution,⁴⁸ even before termination of the precedent estate.⁴⁹

Contingent remainders. In some states contingent remainders are not liable to be sold under execution,⁵⁰ at least where the person to take on the happening of the event is uncertain.⁵¹ In other states, however, a contingent remainder is subject to execution, sometimes by reason of statutory provision,⁵² when clothed with the usual attributes rendering it alienable.⁵³

Remainders in personalty. A remainder estate in personalty is subject to execution,⁵⁴ although this is not true of a contingent interest in a legacy.⁵⁵

It has been held in some jurisdictions that a remainder interest in a live chattel cannot be levied upon by execution at law,⁵⁶ while in other jurisdictions it was held that the interest of a tenant in remainder in slaves was liable to be seized and sold under execution.⁵⁷

c. Reversions

A vested estate in reversion is subject to execution, although a mere possibility of reverter is not.

A reversion being an estate vested in praesenti, although to take effect in possession and profit in futuro, may be aliened and charged as an estate in possession, and is therefore liable to be taken and sold under execution.⁵⁸ This is not so as to a mere

Restriction against alienation

The interest of a grantee under deed reserving life estate to grantors and providing that share of any grantee selling prior to death of grantors should go to other grantees, could be sold on execution issued on judgment against such grantee, notwithstanding grantee herself could not sell or convey her interest.—

possibility of reverter which is not subject to voluntary sale.⁵⁹

d. Executory Devises

An executory devise defeasible on a contingency is subject to execution as a vested estate.

One claiming by executory devise, defeasible on a contingency, takes a vested estate in fee or in tail, defeasible on the happening of such contingency, which is subject to execution, and may be taken and held by the execution creditor until the happening of the contingency.⁶⁰ An executory devise has been held to be subject to execution even during the continuance of the previous estate.⁶¹ However, such a devise subject to a condition which makes the estate wholly contingent and a mere possibility cannot be reached on execution.⁶²

e. Life Estates

Generally a life estate is subject to levy under an execution against the life tenant.

The general rule is that the interest of a judgment debtor in an estate for life is subject to levy under execution,⁶³ in the absence of any statutory provisions to the contrary,⁶⁴ and in the absence of any clause in the instrument creating the estate restricting the power of alienation.⁶⁵ The tendency of modern decisions in the construction of the various statutes on this subject is to hold that, in the absence of the appointment of trustees, the power of alienation cannot be restricted so as to exempt a life estate from levy and sale under execution against a life tenant.⁶⁶

f. Estates for Years

An estate for years may be sold on execution.

An estate for a term of years is regarded as a chattel and may be sold on execution.⁶⁷ By statute estates for years may be sold on execution as real estate.⁶⁸

g. Estates at Will or Sufferance

The authorities are not in agreement on whether a tenancy at will is subject to execution.

There are authorities holding that the interest which a tenant at will or by sufferance has in another's real estate is such an interest in land as can be sold on execution⁶⁹ but other authorities are to the contrary.⁷⁰

h. Rents Reserved to Grantor

There is disagreement on whether rents reserved to a grantor are subject to execution against the grantor.

It has been held that rent reserved to the grantor is such an interest as may be taken in execution against the grantor and sold.⁷¹ However, it has also been held that a rent reserved to the grantor on a conveyance in fee of land cannot be taken on execution against the grantor, even where the conveyance contains a clause of distress and a provision for reentry.⁷² subject to execution against the licensee if under the agreement such property belongs wholly to the licensee. The authorities are not in accord as to whether the license is subject to execution.

Where a mere license is given by the owner of land to another, to enter thereon and plant and raise crops, or extract oil, gas, and minerals, or to operate mines, if so agreed on, such crops, oil, gas, or minerals, as the case may be, will belong wholly to the licensee, and may be levied on as his property.⁷³ However there is authority holding that the interest of a licensee under an oil lease cannot be seized under an execution,⁷⁴ although there is authority to the contrary,⁷⁵ and a license to remove standing trees has been held a personal trust and not subject to execution,⁷⁶ although there is authority to the contrary.⁷⁷

§ 37. Leasehold Interests

The interest of a lessee or lessor of realty or personalty is generally subject to execution.

The lessee's interest under a lease of realty is generally subject to seizure and sale under an execution against the lessee,⁷⁸ although the lessee has sublet the property.⁷⁹ Where, however, the lease is wholly assigned, the lessee does not have a leasehold estate subject to execution.⁸⁰

A lease pur autre vie is not subject to sale as personal property under an execution.⁸¹

In some states a contract of rental with only a usufruct to the tenant is not subject to levy and sale on execution.⁸²

Interest of lessor. The interest of the lessor is subject to execution.⁸³ Where, however, the interest of a security deed grantor is not subject to execution on a subsequent judgment, see infra § 45, a leasehold executed by such grantor after the conveyance is likewise not subject to such execution.⁸⁴

In personal property. Personal property leased for a term may be seized and sold under execution against the lessee,⁸⁵ if, under some statutes, the lessee's interest is assignable without the consent of the lessor or bailor,⁸⁶ the purchaser at the sale acquiring the right to use the property to the end of the term. However, a mere personal license to use a chattel is not an interest subject to execution.⁸⁷

The earnings of a steamboat under charter to a transportation company cannot be seized and subjected to the payment of the owner's debts.⁸⁸

Effect of prohibiting assignment or subletting. A clause in the lease prohibiting alienation absolutely or without the consent of the lessor will not prevent the sale of such lease under execution against the tenant, unless judgment was fraudulently confessed with a view to defeat such restric-

(2) The refusal of a bailor to accept the balance due him on a contract of bailment with right to purchase estops him from asserting as a breach the bailee's refusal to render that which he himself refused to accept. The bailee having tendered payment, which bailor refused to accept, the bailor cannot set up default in that payment to justify seizure of the automobile bailed, as against the rights of the execution creditor of the bailee.—Packard Motor Car Co. v. tion.⁸⁹ On the other hand, statutes forbidding assignment or subletting without the consent or agreement of the lessor have been held to preclude an execution against the interest of the tenant,⁹⁰ in the absence of an agreement which permits assignment or subletting at the will of the lessee.⁹¹

§ 38. Joint or Several Property

The interest of a tenant in common may be reached by an execution against him.

The general rule is that the property of tenants in common is liable to be levied on under an execution against one of them, and the share of the execution debtor therein may be sold to satisfy the judgment,⁹² provided the right of partition is not invaded,⁹³ and provided the limitations of the homestead law discussed in the C.J.S. title Homesteads § 88, also 29 C.J. p 848 note 82—p 850 note 11 are not infringed.

If the execution is issued against two named judgment debtors, the separate property of either debtor is subject to seizure and sale,⁹⁴ as is the property owned by them jointly.⁹⁵ In some jurisdictions, however, by reason of statutory provision, a judgment obtained against joint debtors not all of whom were served with a summons may be enforced out of the joint property of the joint debtors, provided the execution contains an indorsement showing the debtor not served.⁹⁶ In such case, the separate property of the debtor not served cannot be reached, however.⁹⁷

Personal property. The undivided legal interest of defendant in chattels may be seized and sold under execution, since, in contemplation of law, his interest is perfectly distinct from that of his cotenant, and each has a several interest, although the occupation be joint.⁹⁸ Mere authority to sell property held jointly, given by one cotenant to another, does not exempt the share of the former from levy and sale under execution.⁹⁹

Joint bank account. The interest of a coöwner of a joint bank account with a right of survivorship is subject to seizure under an execution against such owner, the execution having the effect of creating a tenancy in common and terminating the right of survivorship.¹

§ 39. Interests in Public Lands

Generally the interest of a purchaser of government land, after entry and payment of the purchase price, is subject to execution, although levied before the issuance of the patent.

A purchaser of land from the government, by the act of entry and payment of the purchase money, acquires an inchoate legal title, and prior to the issuance of the patent the interest of such purchaser, for which he has received a certificate of final payment, may be levied on and sold under execution, the patent when issued taking effect by relation as of the day when the payment was made.²

School lands

A purchaser of school lands who has made the first payment and received a contract of sale has an interest in the land which is subject

However, where equitable interests are not subject to execution, see infra § 40, part payment does not authorize an execution against the purchaser,³ although it is otherwise where any interest in property is subject to execution.⁴

Land conveyed by the owner of land warrants is not subject to execution against him.⁵

The secretary of the interior's retention of the right of approval of a transfer of a lease executed by him under the federal statutes does not prevent the levy of a general execution against the interest of the lessee, nor does it prevent confirmation of the sale subject to the right of approval by the secretary of the interior.⁶

A preemption claim constitutes no interest in land, and therefore such a claim cannot be levied on and sold on execution.⁷ However, in some states a contrary rule prevails.⁸ Moreover, the interest of a miner in his location or mining claim on public lands, and the rights arising thereunder, have been held to be property or an interest which may be taken and sold on execution against him, if not exempt by statute,⁹ and this even though no patent has been issued or applied for.¹⁰

Improvements on public lands. In some jurisdictions the improvements of settlers on public lands are regarded as property, the proper subject matter of binding contracts between individuals, and hence subject to seizure and sale under execution.¹¹ In other jurisdictions, however, by force of statute, improvements on public lands on which debtors reside or which they cultivate are not subject to execution.¹²

Homestead. Under the provisions of the United States Revised Statutes, no lands acquired under the provisions of the Homestead Act shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issuance of the patent therefor.¹³

§ 40. Equitable Estates and Interests in General

At common law equitable estates and interests were not subject to execution; but the modern trend is to subject every equitable interest, which is not too uncertain.

At common law no property but that to which the debtor has a legal title is liable to be taken under the execution that is issued against him.¹⁴ Merely equitable interests in real¹⁵ or personal¹⁶ property, although accompanied with possession, could not be seized under a feri facias, and it was necessary for the judgment creditor to go into equity to subject such interest.¹⁷ However, in some jurisdictions the rule was early adopted, without the aid of statute, that all real estate of the debtor whether legal or equitable was bound by a judgment against him, and might be taken in execution and sold for the satisfaction of the debt.¹⁸

and the trend of modern legislation is to subject every real interest of the debtor to the satisfaction of his debts, and now, by statutory enactment in most of the states, every equitable interest in property,¹⁹ whether real²⁰ or personal,²¹ is subject to levy and sale under execution against a judgment debtor; but even under such statutes, an interest that is so undetermined, uncertain, or contingent, that it is incapable of being appraised or sold with fairness to both the debtor and creditor, cannot be levied on.²² There is a distinction between a right to have an equity established and enforced, which is not the subject of sale under execution, and an equitable estate which may be sold.²³

In Kentucky the statute impliedly forbids execution against equitable interests,²⁴ unless the debtor consents,²⁵ the only remedy being by action after a return of nulla bona.²⁶

Right of redemption or possession after sale. It has been held that where a judgment debtor's interest in lands is sold under a valid levy, under a valid judgment and execution, or under a power of sale, his rights of redemption or possession are not subject to levy and sale under another execution,²⁷ and where such right of redemption has been sold and satisfaction entered, the court should vacate the entry and issue another execution;²⁸ but there are authorities maintaining the opposite view.²⁹

- a. Interest of grantor
- b. Interest of trustee
- c. Interest of beneficiaries
- d. Payment of consideration for title in another

a. Interest of Grantor

Generally the grantor has no such interest in the trust property as is subject to execution; but if he retains an interest it may be reached.

The general rule is that after a trust is created, the grantor has no such interest in the trust property as is the subject of sale under execution at law;³⁰ but if the deed of trust leaves an interest in the trust property in the grantor, such interest may be sold on execution against him.³¹

b. Interest of Trustee

A trust estate is not subject to sale under an execution issued against a trustee where he has no beneficial interest in such estate; but the rule is generally otherwise where the trustee has a beneficial interest of his own.

To subject even a legal interest to sale under an execution, it is essential that the debtor have a beneficial interest in the property.³² Therefore, a trust estate is not subject to sale under an execution issued against a trustee, he having no beneficial interest in such estate,³³ especially where the judgment creditor had actual notice of the existence of the trust;³⁴ but the rule is otherwise where the trustee has a beneficial interest of his own,³⁵ and where there is a conveyance to trustees, one of whom is to take a beneficial interest in the property, he takes a legal estate to the extent of such interest, which may be seized and sold under execution.³⁶

c. Interest of Beneficiaries

Under the modern rule a beneficiary's interest in a trust is subject to execution provided, generally, that it is a simple inactive trust; but in some jurisdictions a spendthrift trust is not within the rule.

The interest of a cestui que trust in lands was not, at common law, liable to seizure or sale under execution;³⁷ but, by section 10 of the English Statute of Frauds, trust estates were made liable to execution for the debts of the cestui que trust.³⁸ This statute did not extend to the provinces³⁹ and has never been adopted in some states.⁴⁰ However, reenactments of this statute or similar enactments are in force in many of the United States.⁴¹

Interest in realty

(1) Interest of beneficiary of trust in real property, where beneficiary was entitled to proceeds thereof

Under many of the statutes, the rule is laid down that where the legal title is vested in the trustee under a passive, simple, or dry trust, with no duty except to convey to the person ultimately entitled, the interest of the cestui que trust is subject to seizure and sale under execution;⁴² but where the land is held by the trustee under an active trust, requiring the continuance of the legal title in him to enable him to perform his duties, the equitable estate is not subject to execution.⁴³ It is also the generally accepted doctrine in the United States, in construing statutes based on 29 Car. II, that in order to subject the equitable estate of a cestui que trust to execution at law, the trust must be clear and simple, and for the benefit of the debtor alone, and that equitable interests held jointly with another person are not subject to sale under execution.⁴⁴

Where cestui que trust has whole beneficial interest. In some jurisdictions, by force of statute, where the cestui que trust has the whole beneficial interest in the property, his estate and interest therein are subject to the levy of an execution, without resort to the remedies afforded by a court of equity.⁴⁵ In other jurisdictions this rule is applied where the cestui que trust is in possession of the property.⁴⁶

only, was held personally, and not interest in realty subject to attachment by levy on realty, but subject to execution as personality.—Houghton v. Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, 295 P. 1079, 111 Cal. App. 509.

(3) However, beneficiary of realty trust, obligating trustees after twenty year trust period to convey to beneficiaries, was held to have an equitable estate in corpus, and hence "interest in realty" for purposes of execution.—Lynch v. Cunningham, 21 P.2d 154, 131 Cal.App. 164, rehearing denied 21 P.2d 973, 131 Cal.App. 164.

Spendthrift trusts and trusts for payment of income. A beneficiary's interest in, or income from, a spendthrift trust is generally not subject to execution.⁴⁷ However, his interest in such a trust, on expiration of the trust period,⁴⁸ and property from such a trust when received by the beneficiary⁴⁹ are subject to execution.

Special executions to obtain portion of debtor's trust income are discussed infra § 406.

d. Payment of Consideration for Title in Another

Where one person furnishes the consideration for a conveyance to another and a resulting trust arises, the trustee has no such interest in the property as is subject to execution against him, but the property is usually regarded as subject to execution against the person furnishing the consideration, although there is authority to the contrary.

Where money or effects of one person are advanced and used in the purchase of property by another, who takes the title to himself, and a trust results by operation of law in favor of the party whose money or property has been used, the party in whom the naked legal title is vested has no such interest in the property as is subject to execution against him.⁵⁰ On the other hand, where property is purchased by a judgment debtor with his own money, and the title thereto is taken in the name of another, such property is subject to sale under execution against the debtor,⁵¹ although there is authority to the contrary,⁵² and, of course, the rule is otherwise where by the local law such facts do not raise a resulting trust.⁵³ The rule does not apply where the title is taken in a third person in trust for still another third person.⁵⁴

§ 42. Interests under Contracts

Rights arising under contracts for services which are merely personal rights are not liable to sale under execution.

The rule seems to be well recognized that all contracts for the hire of labor, skill, or industry, without any distinction, whether they can be as well performed by any other as by the obligor, unless there is some special agreement to the contrary, are considered as personal on the part of the obligor, and such rights, which are merely personal, are not liable to sale under execution.⁵⁵

§ 44. Property Mortgaged or Conveyed by Trust Deed to Secure Debt

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 45. — Interest of Mortgagor or Grantor

- a. Mortgaged property
- b. Property conveyed by trust or security deed

a. Mortgaged Property

- (1) In general
- (2) Personal property
- (3) Real property

(1) In General

At common law, an equity of redemption from a mortgage was not subject to execution.

On the principle of the common law that no property but that in which the debtor has a legal title is liable to be taken under execution against him, an equity of redemption is not liable to sale under execution against the mortgagor,⁵⁶ but as considered infra this section, the common-law rule has been very generally changed both as to real and personal property.

(2) Personal Property

In many states, so long as the possessory right of a mortgagor of chattels remains his interest in the mortgaged property is generally held subject to sale under execution against him, although there is authority to the contrary. By the majority view the property is not subject to execution against the mortgagor after default or taking of possession by the mortgagee.

Except in a few jurisdictions,⁵⁷ the common-law rule has been abrogated either by statute or by the adoption of the equitable view of mortgages, and the doctrine is well established that a mortgage is not a conveyance on condition, but a mere security for the mortgage debt, and that, so long as the possessory right of a mortgagor of chattels remains, his interest in the mortgaged property is subject to sale under execution against him,⁵⁸ at least so long as the mortgagor is rightfully in possession,⁵⁹ and in some jurisdictions it is necessary to pay the mortgagee or make a tender or deposit of the amount due the mortgagee on the secured debt.⁶⁰

After default or taking possession by mortgagee. After default the equity of redemption of mortgaged chattels may be sold on execution in some states.⁶¹ In most states, however, after the default or taking of possession by the mortgagee, the property is not subject to execution against the mortgagor,⁶² on the theory that after default there is no such possessory right or interest left in the mortgagor as is capable of being seized and sold under execution against him.⁶³ Where this latter doctrine obtains, the rule is adhered to, even where the mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession after default,⁶⁴ since in the eye of the law he is in possession merely by sufferance and as the bailee of the mortgagee.⁶⁵ The courts in some jurisdictions have carried this doctrine to the extent of holding that even before condition broken, where the mortgagor has not the right of possession for a definite period, his interest is an equity of redemption merely, which is not the subject of levy and sale on execution, his possession being permissive merely and not a matter of right.⁶⁶ Where the statute places the legal title and right to possession in the mortgagee, the mortgagor has no interest subject to execution.⁶⁷

Surplus in hands of mortgagee. If the property is sold by the mortgagee, a surplus in his hands is subject to execution against the mortgagor, regardless of agreements between the mortgagor and mortgagee to apply it to the claims of the general creditors of the mortgagor.⁶⁸

(3) Real Property

A mortgagor's title or equity of redemption in realty is generally subject to execution.

By force of statute, or independent thereof, the rule in most jurisdictions at the present time is that the mortgagor's title or equity of redemption in real property is subject to seizure and sale on execution by a third person, either before or after default,⁶⁹ and it is likewise subject to sale by the mortgagee on an execution obtained on a debt not secured by the mortgage.⁷⁰

Absolute deed as mortgage. It has been held that the conveyance of an estate by an absolute deed, although accompanied by an agreement for reconveyance or other form of defeasance, leaves the grantor, at law, without any interest in the land which can be attached or sold on an execution at law against him,⁷¹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁷²

b. Property Conveyed by Trust or Security Deed

Contrary to the rule at common law, the interest of a grantor in a deed of trust given to secure a debt is now subject to execution in many states; but in at least one jurisdiction a debtor has no leviable interest in property conveyed by him to secure a debt until the property has been redeemed or reconveyed.

At common law the interest of a grantor in a deed of trust to secure a debt was not subject to sale under execution against him,⁷³ and in many jurisdictions, following the common-law rule, it was formerly held that the interest of a grantor in a deed of trust is not analogous to the interest of a mortgagor, and is not the subject of levy on execution at law.⁷⁴ Now, however, in a majority of the states, where a debtor conveys property by deed of trust to secure the payment of his indebtedness, and in the deed of trust gives the trustee power to sell the property thereby conveyed in the event of his default in the payment of the indebtedness, such conveyance is regarded as having substantially the same effect as mortgages with powers of sale, and the interest or estate in the grantor is held to be subject to execution at law.⁷⁵

In at least one jurisdiction a debtor has no leviable interest in land conveyed by him to secure a debt until the property has been redeemed by payment of the secured debt,⁷⁶ or until the creditor has executed, filed, and recorded a deed reconveying the property to the debtor.⁷⁷

(3) The deed is not invalid or inoperative because no consideration passes, or because it is executed before issuance of execution against the foreclosed property, and it is sufficient although it does not describe the proceedings by which judgment was obtained.—Alsabrook v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, supra.

Grantee's transferee of secured note may enforce judgment on note by executing deed to security deed grantor and levying on and selling property.—Edwards v. Decatur Bank & Trust Co., 167 S.E. 292, 176 Ga. 194.

a. Mortgaged Property

Before foreclosure or condition broken the mortgagee's interest in either real or personal property generally is not subject to execution.

Generally the interest of the mortgagee in personal property, where the possession remains with the mortgagor, and before condition broken, cannot be taken in execution as the property of the mortgagee,⁷⁸ and in some jurisdictions it is held that a mortgagee's interest, after breach of condition, and before foreclosure, is not subject to execution, even where the property is in his possession.⁷⁹ However, in other jurisdictions, after condition broken, it may be levied on under an execution against the mortgagee,⁸⁰ even where the property remains in the hands of the mortgagor.⁸¹

Real property. In the absence of statute, the estate of the mortgagee in real property, before foreclosure, is not the subject of sale under execution against him,⁸² even after default, before entry for breach of condition,⁸³ either where he is sole defendant, or where the attempt is to levy on and sell the entire estate, under execution against both mortgagor and mortgagee.⁸⁴ The rule has been applied after entry for the purpose of foreclosure, but before foreclosure has taken place.⁸⁵ Even where land is conveyed by a deed absolute in form but intended as a mortgage, the grantee has been held to have no such estate as is subject to execution;⁸⁶ but it seems that, at least in some jurisdictions, a creditor without notice may levy thereon as the property of the grantee,⁸⁷ and it has been held that land held by absolute deed as security for a debt still unpaid is subject to levy and sale as the property of the grantee, under a judgment against him, no matter whether the judgment creditor gave credit on the faith of the property so held or not.⁸⁸

b. Property Conveyed by Trust or Security Deed

In some jurisdictions the grantee's interest under a deed of trust is not subject to execution; but in others, where the grantor has no leviable interest in property conveyed by him to secure a debt, the grantee's interest is subject to execution.

In those jurisdictions in which the interest of the grantor in property conveyed by trust or security deed is subject to execution, by parity of reasoning, the grantee in such deed of trust has no interest in the property so conveyed as is subject to sale under execution against him.⁸⁹ On the other hand, in jurisdictions where it is held that the grantor has no leviable interest in land conveyed by him to secure a debt the grantee's interest is subject to execution.⁹⁰

§ 47. Property Pledged or Pawned

Although at common law property pawned or pledged was not liable to be taken in execution in an action against the pledgor, now the pledgor's interest generally is subject to execution in an action by the pledgee or a third person.

At common law property pawned or pledged was not liable to be taken in execution in an action against the pledgor,⁹¹ at least, not unless the bailment was terminated by payment of the debt, or by some other extinguishment of the pledgee's title;⁹² however, by statute or otherwise, in most of the states the interest of the pledgor in the property pledged is now liable to seizure and sale on execution, subject to the interest of the pledgee therein.⁹³ Where the pledgee elects to waive his lien on the property pledged, there seems to be no reason why he may not levy on such property under a writ against the pledgor.⁹⁴

Interest of pledgee. It seems to have been formerly thought that the interest of a pledgee in the pledged property was not subject to execution for the debt of the pledgee.⁹⁵ Now, however, it is held in some jurisdictions that since the pledgee has a beneficial interest accompanied by a rightful possession, such interest is subject to levy and sale under execution against him.⁹⁶

§ 48. Estate of Decedent

After the death of a judgment debtor, his estate is not subject to execution issued on a judgment against him, unless the judgment is revived or, in some jurisdictions, unless the judgment became a lien.

Generally the property of decedent is not subject to seizure and sale under an execution issued on a judgment against decedent, and remaining unsatisfied at the time of his death,⁹⁷ where there is no revivor of the judgment;⁹⁸ unless, in some jurisdictions, the judgment became a lien during his lifetime,⁹⁹ and the necessity of a lien has been held to exist in some jurisdictions even though the judgment has been revived.¹ The lien of a judgment on the property of deceased is not, however, impaired by a statute specifying the order in which debts of an estate shall be paid.² Statutes sometimes prevent issuance of an execution unless the judgment is for the recovery of real or personal property, or for the enforcement of a lien thereon,³ and it is held thereunder that the fact that an attachment was levied does not authorize an execution on the ground that the action then became one to enforce a lien.⁴ After the death of one of several judgment debtors, execution cannot be enforced against the estate of the deceased debtor without revival of the judgment, although his name properly appears in the recitals of the parties.⁵

Where judgment is entered against heirs in their representative capacity, execution may issue against the personality of decedent in their possession, or if there is none, against the realty which has descended to them.⁶

§ 49. — Interests of Devisees or Legatees

The interest of a devisee or legatee, provided it is vested, is subject to execution on a judgment against him.

Since each devisee or legatee has a legal estate which may be alienated or devised by him, such estate is likewise subject to execution against him, in the same manner as other beneficial legal estates,⁷ provided the estate or interest is not contingent.⁸ So if the estate of the devisee depends on his remaining in possession, it is not subject to execution.⁹ A legacy does not vest in the legatee until the executor has assented to it, or at least until it is seen with reasonable certainty that he will not need the legacy to enable him to pay claim of a higher rank than the claim of the legatee, and until property has vested in the legatee it is not subject to be seized and sold for his debts.¹⁰ A fortiori, if the property is sold by the executors to pay debts, under a power of sale, it is not subject to execution against the devisee.¹¹ The doctrine has been laid down in some states that when devisees are entitled to several parcels of land, a specific parcel cannot, before partition, be sold on execution against a single devisee, on the theory that such a sale would be an attempt to interfere with the rights of other devisees to partition.¹²

Option to purchase. Where a testator devised certain property to his children to be divided into shares, at a certain valuation, with the option to one to purchase the interests of the others, which option was exercised and fully complied with before a levy on the interest so purchased, it was held that the purchaser at the execution sale took no title.¹³

A personal power or discretion bestowed on a debtor by will cannot be sold on execution. Such a personal power is not a chose in action, to be confiscated or abridged at the instance of a judgment creditor by forced sale.¹⁴

§ 50. — Interests of Heirs or Distributees

An heir's undivided interest in the realty of an ancestor may be levied on and sold under an execution against the heir, and, although there is authority to the contrary, a distributee's undivided interest in personalty is also subject to execution.

The estate of an heir is an undivided interest in each and every tract of land owned by the ancestor at the time of his death.¹⁵ Subject to the debts of the ancestor, it may be levied on by execution or

Provision against alienation or execution

A direct devise with provision forbidding alienation by devisee, or declaring that the property shall not be subject to execution, cannot withdraw the property from execution, since the prohibition does not operate to divest the debtor's estate vested in another and while he retains the whole beneficial estate it must carry with it power to dispose of the property by transfer whether voluntary or involuntary.—Sternberger v. Glenn, 137 S.W.2d 269, 175 Tenn. 644.

Partial distribution by order of court or otherwise

Statutory language that, if by virtue of "order of court or otherwise" a partial distribution shall have been made by personal representative of decedent prior to service of execution, only the remainder of personal estate going to legatee or devisee shall be affected by execution, is so clear and unequivocal that rules of construction such as rule of "ejusdem generis" have no application, since statute means whether an order of court was made or not.—In re Freitag's Estate, 107 P.2d 978, 165 Or. 427.

Personalty in executor's possession

attachment, and sold as the property of the heir.¹⁶ In some jurisdictions, the interest of any person in the personal property of an estate may be levied on before the distributive share of such person has been ascertained or ordered to be paid;¹⁷ but in others, personalty rests primarily in the executor or administrator, and a distributee has no title therein subject to execution until distribution has been made.¹⁸

§ 51. Ownership or Possession of Property

- a. In general
- b. Property subject of judicial or execution sale
- c. Mere possession of land without title or mere claim without possession

a. In General

A judgment creditor is entitled to take on execution only what belongs to the debtor; however, any title alleged to be in the debtor may be sold.

A judgment creditor is entitled to take on execution only what belongs to his debtor,¹⁹ and only the actual interest of the debtor therein;²⁰ but a mere disclaimer of title does not defeat the right of the judgment creditor,²¹ and any title alleged to be in the debtor may be sold leaving the purchaser to try the validity of it afterward in ejectment or other appropriate action.²² The judgment debtor will not be permitted to deny the title, or to set it up in any one else.²³ An agreement by a third person to pay a judgment does not authorize a levy on his property under an execution against another.²⁴ In the absence of knowledge, actual or constructive, of the true title, the officer may presume that personalty is owned by the party in possession thereof.²⁵ If one in possession owns growing crops they may be sold on execution as his personal property.²⁶

Materials of contractor. The doctrine seems to be well settled that where a contractor engages to construct a house, vessel, bridge, or other thing, and to furnish the materials therefor, that no property vests in the person for whom it is to be built, until finished and delivered, even where certain portions of the contract price are agreed to be paid, and are paid to the contractor, at specific stages of the work; but such materials, prior to completion of the contract and delivery, are subject to seizure and sale under execution against the contractor.²⁷ The rule is otherwise, however, where the materials are furnished on the credit of the building,²⁸ or where by express agreement the materials belong to the owner, and the contractor merely has the right to an accounting after the building is sold,²⁹ and in any case where there are attendant circumstances from which the intention may be inferred that the property shall pass in the incomplete and growing structure as the manufacture of it proceeds, or even in the materials from which it is to be built, that intention will be effectuated.³⁰

b. Property Subject of Judicial or Execution Sale

The title of a purchaser at a judicial or execution sale before a deed is executed or the time to redeem has expired has been held subject to execution, although there is authority to the contrary.

The tendency of the later decisions is to make subject to execution the title of a purchaser at judicial or execution sale before a deed is executed or the time to redeem has expired.³¹ However, there are decisions that the purchaser of property at a judicial sale has not, previous to the making and delivery to him of the sheriff's or the commissioner's deed, such an interest in the property as can be levied on and sold under execution against him;³² and that, where the judgment debtor is allowed by statute a stipulated time within which to redeem his property sold under execution, the purchaser at the execution sale acquires no leviable interest in the property prior to the expiration of the time allowed for redemption.³³ The interest of a purchaser of land at judicial sale, before a deed is executed, has been held not subject to execution, where the statute authorizes a sale on execution of only the "legal" title.³⁴ Likewise certificates given to purchasers of land for nonpayment of taxes have been held not subject to execution.³⁵

Interest of debtor. The retention of possession by the execution debtor of property sold at a sheriff's sale is not an index of fraud, because the sale is not the act of such debtor, but of the law; and property thus purchased and left in the possession of the former owner is not liable to be taken under another execution against such debtor,³⁶ unless the purchase was not made in good faith,³⁷ or the transaction was such as to constitute a resale instead of a bailment.³⁸ A fortiori is this true where the purchaser has taken possession of the property.³⁹

c. Mere Possession of Land without Title or Mere Claim without Possession

Although there is authority to the contrary, as a general rule the mere possession of land is such an interest as may be the subject of execution; but a mere claim without possession may not be sold on execution.

It is generally held that the naked possession of land is such an interest as may be the subject of execution,⁴⁰ although there is authority to the contrary;⁴¹ but it has been held that a naked claim to be the owner of land, unaccompanied by possession, does not constitute a right that can be sold on execution.⁴²

§ 52. — Property Held Adversely

Where personal property is held adversely to its owner it is not liable to sale under execution against him; but as a general rule a debtor's interest in real property is subject to execution even where it is held by a third person in adverse possession.

Where personal property is held adversely to its owner, his interest therein being a mere chose in action, in the absence of statute it is not liable to sale under execution against him.⁴³ At common law, and by construction of the earlier statutes in many of the states, the debtor's interest in land in adverse possession was not subject to sale

under execution against him;⁴⁴ but now the general rule is that the interest of a debtor in real property is subject to sale under execution against him, even where such property is held by a third person in adverse possession, the rule against champertous conveyances not applying to such sales.⁴⁵ In such a case the execution debtor will not be permitted to interpose the adverse possession to defeat the seizure.⁴⁶

§ 53. — Property or Rights Conveyed or Assigned

Generally where property has been sold or assigned by the judgment debtor it is not subject to execution against the seller or assignor.

Generally where property has been sold or assigned by the judgment debtor it is not leviable under execution against the seller or assignor,⁴⁷ and if creditors desire to attack the transaction on the ground of fraud the proper mode of procedure is by a creditors' bill.⁴⁸ The same rule applies where property has been sold under attachment by order of the court;⁴⁹ but if by mutual mistake all of a tract is conveyed instead of an undivided half interest, the undivided half interest intended to be retained is subject to execution against the grantor.⁵⁰ If personalty is reconveyed it may be levied on as the property of the original owner;⁵¹ but if the debtor has bona fide conveyed all his interest in land at the time of the levy, his subsequent acquisition of title thereto will not inure to the benefit of the creditor so as to make his levy good by relation.⁵² If property is levied on as belonging to the buyer, it must appear that the title is in him.⁵³

§ 54. — Property Consigned for Sale or in Custody of Agent, Factor, or Bailee

a. In general

b. Property consigned for sale

a. In General

Property in the possession of a bailee, without claim of title, is liable to execution for the debt of the bailor, but not for the debt of the bailee, unless the bailee acquires some special interest in the property.

Where property is in the possession of one other than its owner, merely as bailee, without claim of title, it is liable to execution for the debt of the bailor,⁵⁴ but not to an execution for the debt of Creditor acquired no interest in property through sale, where the debtor had assigned it prior to the levy of execution.—North v. Evans, 36 P.2d 133, 1 Cal. App. 2d 64.

Assignment to co-owner

Where two persons, each of whom owned a half interest in certain lands, orally agreed that one of them might trade off as his own the interest of both in part of lands, and that the other person should be the exclusive owner of the remaining lands, and the one who thus parted with all his interest in the lands afterward became the judgment debtor of another person, the remaining lands cannot be seized and sold at execution to satisfy the judgment debt.—Kindig v. Richardson, 194 P. 920, 108 Kan. 218.

Deed recorded before execution sale will defeat title acquired at such sale.—Boland v. Kirkwood Trust Co., 298 S.W. 1052, 220 Mo. App. 1219.

Property transferred by assignee

A judgment creditor was entitled to levy on property of judgment debtor which had been transferred by judgment debtor's assignee for benefit of creditors as property of judgment debtor, and judgment creditor was not limited to levying on property by way of garnishment, since statute permitting a garnishment when property is in possession of a third party does not afford exclusive remedy.—McCoy v. Justice Court of Township of Santa Ana, 71 P.2d 1115, 23 Cal. App. 2d 99.

the bailee.⁵⁵ Where, however, under a contract of bailment, an interest or special property in the thing bailed passes to the bailee, such interest is liable to execution for the debts of the bailee.⁵⁶ In many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted, aimed at pretended loans on personal property, providing that uninterrupted possession by the borrower for a specified period, without demand, prosecuted by due course of law, by the lender, will render such property subject to sale on execution against the borrower, unless such alleged loan, reservation, or limitation of use or property is declared by will or deed, properly proved and recorded.⁵⁷ Where, however, the owner of a chattel lends it to another, it is not liable to an execution against the borrower in favor of a creditor whose debt was contracted before the loan was made, and where the credit could not have been given upon the faith of the supposed ownership.⁵⁸ Similarly, where the owner resumes the possession before any creditor of the borrower has acquired a lien upon it, it cannot be afterward made subject to the debts of the borrower.⁵⁹

b. Property Consigned for Sale

Generally property consigned to an agent for sale is not subject to sale under execution on a judgment against the agent; but where the transaction amounts to an absolute sale of the property to the consignee the property is leviable under an execution against him.

The general rule is that personal property consigned to a dealer, factor, or other agent, with authority from the owner to sell such property, the agent being required to account for the proceeds when sold, is not subject to sale under execution on a judgment obtained against such agent.⁶⁰ The mere fact that one is to have an interest in the profits of certain property after it has been sold does not give him a leviable interest in the property itself.⁶¹ Where the contract does not contemplate an absolute acquisition of title by the bailee or agent, or his becoming absolutely responsible for the purchase price, the transaction cannot be regarded as an absolute sale, or as creating an interest in his favor, so as to render the property liable to execution against him.⁶²

Where transaction amounts to absolute sale. Where the instrument consigning the goods to the agent or bailee creates an apparent absolute liability on his part for the purchase price of the goods, the transaction will be regarded in law as an unconditional and absolute sale, even though the instrument declares it to be otherwise, and expressly stipulates that title shall remain in the consignor until payment of the purchase price; and such property in the hands of the consignee is leviable under execution against him.⁶³

Property on which a factor has a lien for advances may be levied on subject to such lien.⁶⁴

§ 55. Property in Custody of Law

- a. In general
- b. Property held under prior writs
- c. Money in hands of court or officer

a. In General

As a general rule, property that is in custodia legis is not subject to execution without leave of court.

The doctrine is well settled that property in the hands of sheriffs, constables, clerks of court, receivers, executors and administrators, appraisers, assignees in bankruptcy, etc., is regarded as being in custodia legis, and cannot be reached by execution, in the absence of statutory authority,⁶⁵ without leave of court.⁶⁶ The doctrine of "in custodia legis" is a rule of property right, made for the benefit of litigants, as well as a rule of jurisdiction, made for the purpose of avoiding conflicts between courts,⁶⁷ and it applies until the matters involved have been finally disposed of,⁶⁸ and whether the execution issued out of the same or another court.⁶⁹ The rule does not apply to a case in which an action is pending to enforce a lien or to adjudicate a title, but in which the court has acquired, and is seeking to acquire, no possession of the property, actual or constructive, and in which no such possession is requisite to the determination of the controversy before it, and no attempt is made to withdraw that controversy to another tribunal.⁷⁰ Such cases are governed by the doctrine of lis pendens.⁷¹

Property released under bond. Where, after a levy on property by attachment or execution, such property is released from the custody of the officer under a bond given to try the right thereto,⁷² or under a forthcoming and delivery bond,⁷³ the property is still regarded as being in the custody of the law, and is not subject to seizure and sale under a junior execution. However, the giving of a bond to dissolve an attachment has been held not to exempt the property, on which the attachment was released, from seizure on execution.⁷⁴

When property in custody of law

Property is in "custody of law" when it has been lawfully taken by authority of legal process, and remains in possession of public officer or court officer empowered by law to hold it.—Allan v. Hargadine-McKittrick Dry Goods Co., 28 S.W.2d 670, 325 Mo. 400.

When the subject of the attachment is land, the giving of a bond by defendant in attachment under statute to pay such sum as shall be adjudged due to plaintiff, does not operate to preclude plaintiff from proceeding upon his judgment and execution subsequently recovered to

b. Property Held under Prior Writ

In many jurisdictions property once levied on is not liable to be taken by another execution, but in others property of a debtor in the custody of the law under prior writs is subject to levy.

By the great weight of authority property once levied on remains in the custody of the law and is not liable to be taken by another execution or process in the hands of a different officer, and especially by an officer acting under another jurisdiction.⁷⁵ However, if title to the property sold on execution becomes revested in the judgment debtor,⁷⁶ or if the officer holds the property as agent of the parties, and not in his official capacity,⁷⁷ it may be levied on. In some jurisdictions, by statute, property of a debtor in the custody of the law under prior writs is subject to levy under subsequent writs of execution, thus giving creditors priority, according to their diligence, in any interest the creditor may have in the property after the prior execution has been satisfied;⁷⁸ but where a second execution is levied it is subordinate to the interest of the party holding under a prior writ.⁷⁹

Where original judgment is void. Since it is only where property is lawfully taken by virtue of legal process that it can be considered as being in the custody of the law, and not otherwise,⁸⁰ property of an execution defendant levied on and seized by an officer under execution issued on a void judgment will not prevent the seizure and sale of such property under a subsequent execution issued on a valid judgment;⁸¹ but property seized under an execution valid on its face, issued on a judgment voidable but not void, is not subject to seizure under another execution,⁸² although a void judgment or an illegal levy does not put the property in custodia legis so as to preclude a levy under another execution.⁸³

Replevined property. Property taken under a writ of replevin from an officer who has seized it on execution remains in custodia legis and is not subject to execution.⁸⁴

c. Money in Hands of Court or Officer

Money realized by an officer by virtue of an execution, or money paid into court, cannot be levied on as the property of the judgment creditor.

The doctrine is well settled that money realized by an officer by virtue of an execution, or money paid into court, cannot be levied on as the property of the judgment creditor, it being regarded as in custodia legis;⁸⁵ nor can money collected on an execution, in the hands of the officer and during the life of the execution and before its return, be applied by the officer in satisfaction of other writs in his hands against plaintiff in the execution,⁸⁶ although there is considerable authority to the contrary.⁸⁷ Application of proceeds of execution sale to the satisfaction of an execution against the execution creditor is considered infra § 248; and set off of executions infra § 335. Likewise money paid to a sheriff for the redemption of lands sold on execution is in the custody of the law, and cannot be levied on, although the person entitled to receive it refuses the money when ten-sell the land.—Cowart v. Venable, 98 So. 219, 86 Fla. 367.

Corpus Juris cited as showing that the authorities are in conflict upon dered by the sheriff.⁸⁸ Property vested in the sheriff as trustee in insolvency, under state laws, is not subject to execution on a judgment against the insolvent.⁸⁹

Liability for debts of debtor under junior execution. The doctrine seems to be, by analogy of reasoning, that money remaining in the hands of the court or court officer, after satisfaction of the execution, by virtue of which it was realized, is not subject to seizure under a junior execution against the execution debtor,⁹⁰ although in some jurisdictions such surplus must be paid over to an officer who holds other executions against the property sold,⁹¹ or it may be applied on a second execution in the hands of the officer,⁹² or it is subject to seizure under a subsequent execution against the debtor.⁹³ Where money is paid to the sheriff it cannot be reached by an older execution against the debtor.⁹⁴

Liability for debts of officer. Money in the hands of or deposited by an officer in his official capacity, realized by virtue of an execution placed in his hands, is not liable to seizure and sale under an execution against him personally.⁹⁵

III. ISSUANCE, FORM, AND REQUISITES OF WRIT

§ 56. Jurisdiction and Authority to Issue and Control

- a. Courts
- b. Clerks of court

a. Courts

In the absence of statute to the contrary, execution may be issued only by the court which rendered the judgment or by a court to which the record has been transferred.

The power of the state courts in general to issue executions is derived from statutory enactments,⁹⁶ and, in the absence of statute, is conferred by the common law.⁹⁷

A court competent to pronounce judgment is generally competent to issue execution.⁹⁸ The writ must, however, be issued out of the court which rendered the judgment, unless some other court is authorized by statute to issue it,⁹⁹ or unless the record has been removed into another court, in which case the court having the record may issue the writ.¹ Writs issued out of a court other than that which rendered the judgment, or into which the record has been removed, are void.²

Courts of concurrent jurisdiction. It is immaterial that the court which rendered the judgment and another court are courts of concurrent jurisdiction, both sitting in the same county; each must enforce its own judgments and decrees.³

Abolition of court. Where a court is abolished by an act of the legislature and its jurisdiction transferred to another court, an execution issued out of the court so abolished is absolutely void, and a sale thereunder is therefore a nullity.⁴

A court which succeeds to the jurisdiction of the abolished court usually has jurisdiction to issue execution on the judgment rendered by the abolished court,⁵ on compliance with statutory conditions,⁶ although some statutes abolishing courts have been held not broad enough to warrant the issuance of execution from the court succeeding to the jurisdiction of the abolished court.⁷

b. Clerks of Court

- (1) In general
- (2) Authority from creditor
- (3) Refusal or failure to issue

(1) In General

In the absence of statute to the contrary, an execution on a judgment of a court of record may be issued by the clerk of the court, or by a person to whom the clerk has properly delegated his authority.

In the absence of statutory designation of the officer or person who may or must issue execution, the general rule is that the judge or justice of an inferior court which has no clerk shall issue it, while if the court has a clerk it shall be issued by the clerk.⁸ It follows that generally, in courts of record, the clerk of the court is the proper officer to issue execution.⁹ Further, as a general rule an execution should be issued only by the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered,¹⁰ unless jurisdiction of the matter has been transferred, by statute, to another court.¹¹

The clerk of court has no authority to issue execution, except on a judgment¹² which remains unsatisfied.¹³ Where, however, satisfaction is not entered on the record, an execution issued is not void but only voidable.¹⁴ The clerk can issue only the form of writ prescribed by the judgment, where a form is prescribed.¹⁵

If a party against whom judgment has been recovered appeals from the clerk's taxation of costs, the clerk has no right to issue execution until the question has been settled by a judge according to usage.¹⁶

Delegation of authority. It is not indispensable to the regularity of an execution that the ministerial act of issuing it should be performed by the clerk of the court or his duly qualified deputy, where the officer may delegate his authority.¹⁷ Where, however, the clerk of the court is the only person authorized to issue an execution, one issued by an attorney is invalid.¹⁸

(2) Authority from Creditor

In the absence of statute to the contrary, the clerk of court has no authority to issue execution without the direction of the judgment creditor or his attorney or assignee.

Unless authorized by statute,¹⁹ the clerk has no power to issue an execution without the direction of the judgment creditor or his attorney, because the clerk is not a party to the judgment and has no control over it.²⁰ The clerk has no right to issue an execution of his own motion²¹ in order to collect his fees,²² or to issue execution for the benefit or at the suggestion of interested parties, other than the party obtaining the judgment.²³ A party is not bound by a proceeding under an execution issued without his authority or that of his attorney,²⁴ even though it is the custom of the clerk to issue execution without such authority.²⁵ In the absence of proof, however, it will be presumed that the clerk issued an execution under the direction of the person who had control of it.²⁶

Application by attorney. The issuance of an execution is not such an act as requires the direct agency of the attorney of record, and plaintiff may himself order the clerk to issue an execution;²⁷ or the application may be made through any attorney or agent.²⁸

Assignee of judgment. It is the duty of the clerk to issue an execution on the demand of an assignee of the judgment, on the production by such assignee of sufficient evidence of his ownership.²⁹

Ratification of unauthorized issuance. The issuance of an execution without the order of the party entitled thereto may be ratified by him, and, if he acquiesces in the issuance of the writ, the irregularity will be deemed to have been waived.³⁰

(3) Refusal or Failure to Issue

Where the record of the court shows a proper judgment or decree authorizing it, the clerk of court must, on application by the proper party, issue a writ of execution.

It is the duty of the clerk to issue a writ of execution on the oral or written demand or request of the holder of the judgment,³¹ specifying, where there is a choice, the particular kind of writ desired.³² The issuance of an execution is a ministerial duty,³³ and if the application for the writ

proceeds from a proper party the clerk has no judicial discretion to exercise, and the only inquiry he can make is whether the record of the court shows a judgment or decree authorizing the issuance of the writ.³⁴ The difficulty of executing the judgment because of the uncertainty of the decree is no concern of his.³⁵ Likewise it is no concern of the clerk that plaintiff applied for his execution after a long delay, if the application was made within the period of the statute of limitations.³⁶

Remedy for refusal. The usual remedy for the wrongful failure or refusal of the clerk to issue execution is mandamus, see the C.J.S. title Mandamus § 97, also 38 C.J. p 638 note 3 et seq, or an action on the official bond of the clerk.³⁷ In some states an appeal may be taken from the clerk's refusal, which appeal can be heard at chambers in another county.³⁸

§ 57. Conditions Precedent

On issuing execution, conditions precedent prescribed by statute or by the judgment must be complied with.

Compliance must be had with the provisions of statutes, or with the terms of the judgment, specifying the conditions under which an execution may be issued.³⁹

§ 58. — Notice and Demand

In the absence of statute it is not necessary that, prior to the issuance of a writ of execution, notice be given to the adverse party although in some jurisdictions it has been held necessary that a demand for payment be made.

There is authority that it is not necessary that a demand for payment be made prior to the issuance of a writ of execution.

ance of an execution;⁴⁰ but in some jurisdictions, and under certain circumstances, execution will not be allowed to issue until after a demand for satisfaction of the debt.⁴¹

Notice. In the absence of statute, no notice is necessary before issuing an execution, since it is assumed that defendant will take notice of what will follow the judgment;⁴² but a defendant cannot complain that he had notice.⁴³

Under some statutes, however, notice of judgment must be served on the party against whom it is rendered before the writ can issue.⁴⁴ Thus under some statutes notice must be given where an execution against real estate is issued to a county other than that in which defendant resides;⁴⁵ but a sale of land under execution without notice to the judgment debtor who is a nonresident of the county is not necessarily void.⁴⁶

§ 59. — Leave of Court

a. Necessity

b. Procedure to procure

a. Necessity

(1) In general

(2) Lapse of time

(3) Effect of failure to obtain

(1) In General

In the absence of statute requiring it, leave of court is ordinarily unnecessary to authorize the issuance of an execution on an unconditional judgment.

In the absence of statutory provision requiring it, leave of court is ordinarily not necessary to authorize the issuance of an execution,⁴⁷ at least where execution is authorized in the judgment;⁴⁸ and an application for leave of court which is not required is not an election of remedies depriving the creditor of the right to issue execution without leave.⁴⁹

Some statutes, however, prohibit the issuance of an execution without an order of court, which provisions are usually applicable to special executions or executions which are sought by plaintiff before the usual time for their issuance;⁵⁰ and a judgment which has been opened to let in a defendant cannot be enforced by execution without special leave of court.⁵¹

Conditional judgment. Where the judgment under which execution is sought is conditional, the authorities appear not to be in entire harmony as to the necessity for obtaining leave of court.⁵²

Purpose of notice

Under statute providing that where judgment has been rendered against a defendant on whom personal service was not made, execution cannot issue until expiration of ten days counting from the notification, the requirement that such notice be given was not intended to give to defendant any right to set up any defense which should have been resorted to prior to judgment but to give him only those rights which are accorded to any defendant against whom there has been rendered a judgment which is final so far as court which rendered it is concerned, and which may be revisited, set aside or reversed only in one of the statutory methods.—Metairie Bank in Liquidation v. Lecler, supra.

Notice dispensed with

Where judgment was rendered under Mexican rule, and in November, 1897, defendant brought suit to enjoin execution, in which injunction was dissolved, defendant having had his day in court, execution could issue without scire facias or other notice required by Act Congr. of the Republic, Dec. 29, 1837 (1 Cammel L. p 1462).—Clements v. According to some authorities a judgment rendered on a condition may not be enforced without special leave,⁵³ but according to other authorities it would appear that such leave is not essential.⁵⁴ At any rate, in such case the better and safer practice would seem to be to present to the court the facts showing nonfulfillment of the condition, and obtain an order of court directing the issuance of the execution.⁵⁵

(2) Lapse of Time

Where the time to issue executions as of course, as prescribed by statute or fixed by the common law, has elapsed, leave of court is necessary to authorize an execution.

Where the time to issue executions as of course, as prescribed by statute or fixed by the common law, has elapsed, leave of court is necessary, by statute in many jurisdictions, to authorize an execution.⁵⁶ The fact that plaintiff has brought an action on his judgment and recovered a new judgment thereon does not prevent his obtaining leave to issue execution on a dormant judgment.⁵⁷

Generally the granting or denial of the motion for leave is discretionary⁵⁸ and each case must be decided on its own facts.⁵⁹ Such discretion must, however, be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law and in a manner to subserve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice;⁶⁰ and where the judgment is wholly unpaid the court under some circumstances has no discretion to deny the motion.⁶¹ Where execution could not have been issued within the period prescribed, and where the statute of limitations has not barred the judgment or a considerable portion thereof, the issuance of an execution is regarded more as a matter of right than of judicial discretion, except in the face of unusual circumstances.⁶²

A motion for leave to issue within the required time, to which motion the attention of the court was not called until after the statutory period had run, has been denied on the ground that it was the business of plaintiff to see that the motion was called to the attention of the court and acted on within the statutory period.⁶³ In those jurisdictions where leave of court is required for issuance after a certain period from the rendition of the judgment, leave of court will not be granted where the period of limitation of the life of the

Where a judgment is to be released on performance of a certain act by defendant, leave of court is not necessary to the issue of an execution, if the act has not been performed within a reasonable time.—Miller v. Milford, 2 Serg. & R., Pa., 35.

54. Judgment to be satisfied in part by note

Where a decree was rendered for a specific sum of money, with leave to defendant to satisfy the same by paying a part thereof in cash and giving his note with security for the balance, on the failure of defendant to comply with the terms of the decree, plaintiff had a right to enforce it by having an execution issued without any further order or decree of the court.—Coulter v. judgment has run.⁶⁴ Leave to issue execution after the lapse of the prescribed period should be denied where an agreement has been made between the parties and carried out.⁶⁵

(3) Effect of Failure to Obtain

Execution issued without leave of court, when leave should be obtained, is ordinarily considered voidable and not void.

While execution issued without leave of court, when leave should be obtained, has been held void,⁶⁶ ordinarily the writ is deemed voidable and not void⁶⁷ and objection thereto can be raised, not by another creditor, but only by the debtor.⁶⁸

b. Procedure to Procure

- (1) At common law
- (2) Under statute

(1) At Common Law

Scire facias was the proper proceeding at common law when leave was necessary to issue execution.

Scire facias was the proper proceeding at common law when leave was necessary to issue execution.⁶⁹ Scire facias to show cause why an execution should not be issued may be served on the judgment defendant alone if alive, and if dead on his executors or administrators,⁷⁰ or on his heirs or terre-tenants, as the occasion may require.⁷¹ The defendant could plead to a scire facias;⁷² and, since the object of the scire facias was merely to give defendant a day in court to show cause, defendant might waive this benefit.⁷³

(2) Under Statute

- (a) In general
- (b) Matters considered

(a) In General

Compliance must be had with statutes prescribing the procedure to be followed in obtaining leave of court to issue an execution.

Other forms of proceedings for obtaining execution have been substituted by statute for the old proceeding by scire facias,⁷⁴ and such statutes must be complied with.⁷⁵ A motion for an order directing execution to issue, made after the termination of the period within which execution would have issued as of course, is not an action to revive a judgment, but a step in an action already commenced.⁷⁶

Time for application. Leave of court must be applied for within the time fixed by statute.⁷⁷ The statute may permit the application to be made in vacation when sufficient reason therefor is shown to exist.⁷⁸

Parties. An application for leave to issue execution may be made by the assignee in the name of the judgment creditor unless he objects.⁷⁹ The executrix of a deceased person may join with the survivor in an application for leave to issue after five years.⁸⁰

Application. Under some statutes no formal pleadings are necessary in proceedings to obtain leave of court by motion;⁸¹ but other statutes require that a petition for leave should be properly

Under a former practice in some of the states, defendant might appear and, in answer to a motion for verified.⁸² An application by one not plaintiff for leave to issue execution, which avers that the applicant owns the judgment, is sufficient without setting out the facts supporting that conclusion.⁸³ The irregularity caused by the omission to state that the judgment was rendered in the court in which the motion is made is cured by a finding to that effect.⁸⁴

A defect in the form or in the substance of an affidavit required by statute to accompany a motion to issue execution does not affect the jurisdiction of the court to hear the motion, but it is sufficient ground for denial of the motion unless it is cured by evidence taken at the trial.⁸⁵ The affidavit need not set forth the judgment or a copy of it;⁸⁶ it is necessary and sufficient that it show that the judgment remains wholly or partly unsatisfied.⁸⁷

Notice of motion. Notice of the motion for leave to issue execution is ordinarily necessary,⁸⁸ although under some statutes it may be made without notice,⁸⁹ where the clerk refuses to issue execution.⁹⁰

Service of notice of the motion is sufficient where made on the attorney for the judgment debtor, or on the attorney for the executor of such debtor.⁹¹

(b) Matters Considered

On a hearing to determine whether execution shall issue, the main consideration is whether or not the judgment has been satisfied.

On application for leave to issue execution the validity of the judgment and the proceedings leading up to it cannot be questioned.⁹² Only circumstances arising after entry of judgment can be considered.⁹³ The sole question as to the judgment usually is whether or not it has been satisfied;⁹⁴ and execution cannot issue unless the judgment plaintiff establishes by satisfactory evidence that the judgment or a part thereof remains unpaid.⁹⁵ However, the court may consider matters rendering the enforcement of the judgment inequitable.⁹⁶ Conflicts in the evidence are addressed to the trial

Ex parte statements

On a hearing to determine whether to discharge a rule to show cause why an order should not be made directing the issuance of execution, the proofs on which the order issued were exhausted, and it was not the function of the court to make comparisons of ex parte statements made in the briefs of the respective parties in order to extract from them such points of agreement as would be sufficient to form a composite factual basis for decision.—*Hunterdon County Nat. court.⁹⁷

It is no defense that an attachment had once been issued, the lien of which had ceased.⁹⁸ If the party against whom it is moved to have execution issue shows that he is the owner of a judgment against the movant, the court may require the former to make a motion to set off his judgment against the one on which execution is sought;⁹⁹ but if the movant on applying for execution complies with the requirements of the code, the court cannot, on mere proof of the existence of another judgment of which the party against whom it is moved to have execution is the owner, deny the application for execution.¹

If the application is for a special execution, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that particular property is liable for payment of the judgment.²

§ 60. — Order for Issuance

While the order to issue execution must conform to the usual requirements of a valid order, no technical form seems to be necessary.

While the order to issue, or granting leave to issue, execution must conform to the usual requirements of a valid order,³ no technical form of order seems to be necessary.⁴ The denial of a motion to restrain a sale of property in custodia legis is not a granting of leave to sell.⁵

Under certain circumstances the order may be in the alternative,⁶ or it may leave to the clerk the duty of ascertaining from the record the amount for which the execution may issue.⁷

On plaintiff's motion for issuance of execution, it is proper for the court of its own motion to issue an order to defendant to show cause why the motion should not be granted.⁸ Ordering execution on motion after the lapse of the statutory five years, under which the judgment is partly satisfied, does not preclude a further order for the satisfaction of the balance of the judgment.⁹

An order for an execution amounts to an order for the enforcement of the judgment;¹⁰ but such an order is void when issued on a judgment which is prima facie satisfied.¹¹

§ 61. Issuance on Transcript of Inferior Court

a. In general

b. Procedure

a. In General

A statute authorizing the filing of a transcript of a judgment of an inferior court in a superior court, so as to make it a lien on real estate, does not of itself warrant the issuance of an execution from the superior court.

As shown supra § 10, statutes in many jurisdictions authorize the issuance of an execution out of the office of the clerk of a superior court, on a judgment rendered by an inferior court or a justice of the peace, on filing a transcript of the judgment in the office of the clerk; but a statute authorizing the filing of the transcript of a judgment of an inferior court in the circuit court, so as to make it a lien on real estate, does not warrant the issuing of execution from the circuit court,¹² except where the statute so provides.¹³

It has been held that real estate cannot be sold under an execution issued by a county judge, but it is necessary to file a transcript of the judgment and have execution issued by the clerk of the circuit court.¹⁴ In some jurisdictions the clerk of the district court has no authority to issue execution on the transcript of a probate or county court judgment.¹⁵ The circuit court, or a similar designated court of record, of the county in which the judgment was rendered is the proper court to which a justice's judgment and proceedings should be certified.¹⁶

b. Procedure

- (1) In general
- (2) Filing and sufficiency of transcript
- (3) Issuance of execution

(1) In General

Compliance must be had with the provisions of statutes prescribing the procedure to be followed and the conditions to be fulfilled in the issuance of an execution on the transcript of a judgment of an inferior court.

Compliance must be had with the provisions of statutes prescribing the procedure to be followed and the conditions to be fulfilled in the issuance of an execution on the transcript of a judgment of an inferior court.¹⁷

Return of execution in inferior court. The issuance and return of an execution in the inferior court is not necessary where not required by statute.¹⁸ However, execution cannot, under some statutes, issue out of the court of record on the transcript unless an execution has previously issued from the inferior court or justice of the peace and been returned nulla bona,¹⁹ and, under other statutes, the issuance of an execution by the justice of the peace, and a return by the officer of nulla bona, are prerequisites to the filing of a transcript in the court of record,²⁰ except where the action in the justice's court is aided by attachment.²¹

turn;²² and it has been held that this should appear by the certificate of the justice.²³ No presumption will be indulged from the issuance of an execution by the clerk of the court of record that the preliminary requirement has been complied with,²⁴ even where the execution issued by the circuit court clerk so recites.²⁵ In some states, however, it has been held that the certificate of execution and return may be filed, by leave of court, nunc pro tunc,²⁶ and that after the lapse of many years it will be presumed that the certificate was produced and filed.²⁷

If an execution has issued in the inferior court and has been returned nulla bona, it must have been a valid one or it will be of no effect in fulfilling the preliminary requirement.²⁸ The execution must have issued out of the justice's court within the period of limitations.²⁹ The requirements of the statute as to the return must be strictly followed by the officer making it,³⁰ under the rule that in special statutory proceedings it must appear on the record that everything was done which the statute requires.³¹ The fact that the execution was returned before the expiration of the time set by statute for return may³² or may not³³ render the execution invalid. A failure to comply with the requirement of the statute as to the issuance and return nulla bona in the lower court is not a mere irregularity, but renders an execution issued on a transcript under such conditions invalid.³⁴

Affidavit in lieu of execution. A method authorized by statute in some states, instead of issuing an execution out of the justice's court and having it returned nulla bona, is to make an affidavit that the judgment has not been paid,³⁵ stating the amount due³⁶ and the insufficiency of defendant's goods to satisfy the judgment.³⁷ The affidavit that the judgment in the justice's court was unpaid need not negative payment of the judgment to the clerk.³⁸ Where an affidavit is necessary, it must have a venue³⁹ and show in whose favor and against whom the judgment was rendered.⁴⁰

Under some statutes it is held that the want of an affidavit does not make the writ void but only voidable;⁴¹ while under other statutes the required affidavit is jurisdictional, and a want of it is a fatal defect.⁴²

(2) Filing and Sufficiency of Transcript

- (a) In general
- (b) Form and contents
- (c) Effect of filing

(a) In General

A transcript of a judgment of an inferior court must be filed at the proper time in order that a superior court may issue execution thereon.

Proceedings with regard to transcripts of judgments of inferior courts must conform strictly to statute.⁴³ The failure to file a transcript renders the execution void as well as all proceedings thereunder;⁴⁴ but a transcript need not be recorded before execution may issue thereon,⁴⁵ unless such recordation is required by statute.⁴⁶

The transcript must be certified to the proper term of court.⁴⁷

Time of filing. Generally the transcript cannot be filed before the time when an execution can be issued by the justice of the peace, and an execution, on a transcript filed prematurely has been held void;⁴⁸ and it must be filed in the court of record before the expiration of the period of time limited for executions in a justice's court,⁴⁹ although it has been held that, where the statute limits the time to sue out execution on a justice's judgment, it applies only to executions in the justice's court, and does not prohibit the filing of a transcript of such judgment after the expiration of the statutory time, and within the statutory period for executions in courts of record, and the issuing of an execution within such latter period.⁵⁰

The transcript must be filed without material delay after the affidavit for the transcript is sworn to,⁵¹ but the filing is sufficiently timely if there is no such delay as might give rise to a presumption that payment was made after the date of the affidavit.⁵²

(b) Form and Contents

The form and contents of the transcript of an inferior court must conform to the requirements of the statute in order that execution may issue on it.

The transcript must, with regard to its contents, comply with the statute⁵³ and recite the facts necessary to authorize the issuance of an execution from the court in which the transcript is filed;⁵⁴ but where a transcript of the judgment is all that is required a full and perfect record of the proceedings in the justice's court need not be filed.⁵⁵ The transcript must show the jurisdictional facts on which the judgment in the justice's or inferior court was founded, since such facts cannot be supplied after the execution is issued,⁵⁶ and hence an execution is void where issued on a transcript which does not show that there was a proper service of process on defendant,⁵⁷ or that defendant appeared either personally or by attorney,⁵⁸ or on a transcript which is not officially signed and certified by the justice or by the judge of the inferior court.⁵⁹

If the statute requires a transcript of the judgment to be filed, it is not sufficient to file a mere abstract of the judgment.⁶⁰ The transcript must be of a judgment properly rendered;⁶¹ but, where a transcript of the proceedings under which the judgment is revived before a justice of the peace is filed in the court of record, a transcript of the original proceedings is not necessary.⁶² A certified copy of the judgment with the return need not appear in the record, and it may not be necessary that a copy of the execution issued from and returned to the lower court should be embodied in the transcript.⁶³

Variance between judgment and transcript. The justice's transcript should correspond with the judgment rendered by him;⁶⁴ but as long as there is no change in meaning a variance in form is of no consequence.⁶⁵

(c) Effect of Filing

After a transcript of a judgment has been filed in a superior court, the court which rendered the judgment ordinarily loses control over all further proceedings, including execution.

When the transcript is duly filed in a superior court the usual rule is that it stands on the same footing, as to execution, as though it were a judgment recovered in the court of record.⁶⁶ In most jurisdictions the justice of the peace, or lower court, as the case may be, can conduct no further proceedings on the judgment after it has been transcribed, but the court of record thenceforth has been held to have the control of all proceedings, including execution.⁶⁷

(3) Issuance of Execution

(a) In general

(b) Requisites and form of writ

(a) In General

The time when an execution may issue on the transcript of a judgment of an inferior court is governed by the statute of limitations as to judgments rendered in the court in which such transcript is filed.

After the transcript has been filed in the superior court, a judgment creditor or his attorney, not the clerk, has the right under some statutes to direct the issue of execution thereon.⁶⁸

Time of issuance. The time when an execution on the transcript of an inferior court may issue is governed by the statute of limitations as to judgments rendered in the superior court,⁶⁹ unless the statute fixes a different period for executions on transcripts of judgments.⁷⁰ This is true, although an action on such judgment would have been barred by the running of the period for actions on judgments in the justice's court.⁷¹ The time is computed however, from the rendition of judgment by the justice or other inferior court rather than from the time of the filing of the transcript.⁷²

Under some statutes, the clerk may issue an execution in vacation, since it is not necessary that there be an application to the court in term time.⁷³

Alias writ. If an execution is issued within the period of limitation and returned unsatisfied, an alias may be issued on the transcript after the period of limitation.⁷⁴

(b) Requisites and Form of Writ

Compliance must be had with statutes governing the requisites and form of writs of execution issuing on a transcript of a judgment of an inferior court.

A writ of execution issuing on a transcript of a judgment of an inferior court must comply with statutory requirements.⁷⁵ The writ is ordinarily tested by the clerk under his official seal.⁷⁶ The fact that the execution recites the judgment as of the court of record, and not as a judgment of a justice of the peace, is not objectionable.⁷⁷ The insertion of a name in the execution which did not appear among the parties in the judgment does not render the execution invalid.⁷⁸

The execution need not recite the previous issuance by the justice of the peace and the return thereon nulla bona;⁷⁹ but if the statute requires the execution to recite the clerk with whom the transcript is filed and the time of such filing, an execution not containing such recitals is void.⁸⁰

Command to levy. It has been held that the execution on the transcript is not objectionable for lacking a clause commanding a levy on the goods and chattels of defendant.⁸¹

§ 62. Issuance on Judgment on Appeal from Justice of the Peace

Where an appeal is taken from a judgment of a justice of the peace, execution is issuable on the judgment of the appellate court, but not on the judgment of the justice.

Where an appeal is taken from a justice's judgment, the appellate court can issue an execution on its judgment,⁸² since the appeal in such a case carries up the whole record for proceedings de novo.⁸³ The execution is issuable on the new judgment and not on the justice's judgment.⁸⁴ In such a case an execution cannot thereafter issue on a transcript of the first judgment docketed before the second judgment.⁸⁵

Execution may ordinarily issue from the appellate court on affirmance on certiorari,⁸⁶ or on a dismissal for want of prosecution.⁸⁷ However, the appellate court ordinarily cannot issue execution where the proceeding is one in which the lower court could not have done so.⁸⁸

§ 63. County to Which Execution May Issue

- a. In general
- b. Effect of irregular issuance

a. In General

Unless authorized by statute, ordinarily execution may not go beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the particular court which rendered the judgment.

In the absence of statutory authorization, execution cannot, at least in the first instance, go beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the particular court which rendered the judgment.⁸⁹

By statute, executions, or at least certain ones, are required to be issued to the county of defendant's residence,⁹⁰ in which case execution may issue to the county or residence of any one of several joint defendants.⁹¹ If a mistake is made as to residence, the creditor may withdraw the writ and procure the issuance of one to the proper county.⁹²

Courts of general jurisdiction, that is, courts having jurisdiction throughout the territorial limits of the state, may issue an execution against property in any county in the state,⁹³ even though the judgment debtor has property in the county where the judgment is entered.⁹⁴ Moreover, by statutes now existing in many states, execution may be directed into any county in the state⁹⁵ where property of defendant is situated.⁹⁶ Other statutes authorize, under certain conditions, the issuance of an execution into counties other than the one in which the judgment was rendered, or where defendant resides, where it is made to appear by the return of an execution nulla bona, or by affidavit, or otherwise, that defendant has no property in the county in which the judgment was recovered sufficient to satisfy the judgment.⁹⁷

An execution irregularly issued to a county other than that in which the judgment was rendered is not absolutely void.

Where plaintiff has a choice under certain circumstances, or on the doing of certain acts, as to the county into which the writ may be sent, and is authorized to have it directed to a county other than that in which the judgment was rendered, an execution irregularly issued into a county other than that in which the judgment was rendered is not absolutely void; and the sheriff will be justified in executing it, and the title of a purchaser thereunder cannot be assailed collaterally.⁹⁸ Where the statute requires that execution shall issue in the first instance to the county in which the judgment was rendered, an execution issued in the first instance to another county is not void.⁹⁹

It may be presumed by all innocent purchasers and by the sheriff that an execution sent beyond the county of the venue is legally sent;¹ but if the purchaser has notice of the irregularity the sale may be avoided.² No one who has no interest in the property levied on under an execution first issued to a county other than that in which judgment is rendered can take advantage of the irregularity.³

§ 64. — Docketing or Filing Transcript

Under some statutes an execution may be issued to any county in which a transcript of the judgment has been docketed or filed.

Under some statutes a transcript of a judgment may be filed or docketed in a county other than the one where the judgment was rendered so as to become a lien on real estate in that county or for the purpose of executions.⁴ Such statutes may require such docketing as a condition to the issuance of an execution to another county.⁵ Under other statutes such docketing, while authorized, is not a condition precedent.⁶

County from which execution issues. The rule is that an execution can issue only from the court in which the judgment was rendered, as distinguished from the court in the county where the judgment is docketed or a transcript filed,⁷ and an execution issued from the other county is void,⁸ unless it is otherwise provided by statute.⁹ Where an execution is issued to another county, the courts of the other county have no control thereof.¹⁰

olutely void,¹¹ and an execution is valid which issues from the clerk's office before the docketing in the other county where it is not delivered to the sheriff until after such docketing.¹² It has even been held that the irregularity caused by issuing the execution and levying thereon several hours before the transcript of the judgment was filed was cured by the subsequent filing of the transcript.¹³

Form of execution. There is authority that an execution which does not show on its face,¹⁴ or does not recite¹⁵ that the transcript has been filed in the county to which it is issued is void.

§ 65. Death of Parties after Judgment

- a. Sole plaintiff
- b. Sole defendant
- c. Several plaintiffs or defendants
- d. Death after execution is awarded
- e. Writ tested before death
- f. Writ tested after death

a. Sole Plaintiff

At common law an execution may not be regularly issued and tested after the death of plaintiff until his personal representatives have revived the judgment; but, under statutes other methods have been introduced by which execution may be had in such case.

At common law and in those states where the rule has not been changed by statute, an execution cannot be regularly issued and tested after the death of plaintiff until his personal representatives have revived the judgment.¹⁶ An execution could not issue in favor of one not in esse,¹⁷ since there was no party left who could make a motion for leave to issue execution on the judgment.¹⁸

Under statutes in many jurisdictions, it is not necessary to sue out a writ of scire facias, and other methods have been introduced by which execution may be had on a judgment after plaintiff's death.¹⁹ Thus, under some statutes, all that is necessary to be done is to indorse on the execution the fact of the death and the name of the personal representative.²⁰ Where a statute has changed the practice, execution must be sued out in the mode prescribed by the statute.²¹

Effect of failure to revive. According to some authorities the revivor of the judgment after the death of plaintiff, where required, is a mere technical form involving no substantial right, the omission of which will not render the execution void, but voidable only;²² but other authorities maintain that without revivor the execution is absolutely void, because after plaintiff's death there is no longer a party in esse competent to sue out an execution on the judgment and receive payment or enter satisfaction thereof, and because judicial proceedings cannot be carried on in the name of a dead man.²³

Assignment of judgment. Where the judgment had been assigned before the death of plaintiff, it has been held that the assignee may issue execution without a proceeding to revive the judgment.²⁴ Under some statutes the assignee may sue out a scire facias in his own name, where there is no executor or administrator;²⁵ but under other statutes execution must issue in the name of the judgment creditor who has died,²⁶ or in the name of his personal representatives.²⁷

Where execution is issued in the name of plaintiff after he has assigned the judgment, the fact that the assignee is dead and that his estate is not represented will not support an affidavit of illegality, as payment to the original plaintiff will protect defendant.²⁸

b. Sole Defendant

- (1) In general
- (2) Validity of writ irregularly issued

(1) In General

Where defendant dies after judgment, an execution cannot be issued, at common law, without first reviving such judgment by a writ of scire facias, but under statutes an execution may be had as by leave of court after a designated period of time has elapsed.

At common law where there is but one defendant, and he dies after judgment, an execution cannot be issued without first reviving such judgment by a writ of scire facias.²⁹ It is immaterial that by statute the judgment is made a lien on the debtor's property,³⁰ and the levy of an attachment in the lifetime of the debtor does not change the rule and enable the creditor to issue an execution after the debtor's death without revival, to reach the attached property.³¹

Where defendant dies pending an appeal, a revivor in the appellate court does not have the effect of reviving the judgment or decree so as to authorize an execution to issue on affirmance without reviving the judgment in the trial court.³²

Under statute. Under some statutes, no execution ordinarily is issuable after the death of the judgment debtor;³³ but the statutes of many jurisdictions permit the issuance of an execution in such case, provided compliance is had with their terms.³⁴ Where required by statute, no execution can issue against the real estate of a deceased judgment debtor until a prescribed notice of the judgment is given to his personal representatives or heirs,³⁵ but such a provision does not apply where defendant conveyed his real estate to another before his death, and the grantee has come into court and opposed the issue of the process.³⁶

Under some statutes, before execution may issue, a certain period of time must have elapsed since the death of the judgment debtor,³⁷ or since the appointment of his personal representative,³⁸ and leave must be obtained from the proper court in the prescribed manner.³⁹ The purpose of such statutes is to allow reasonable time for the administration of the estate, and to prevent creditors from embarrassing the estate and adding to the confusion caused by the death of the debtor.⁴⁰

Under a statute which provides that, after the expiration of one year from the death of the party against whom a final judgment for a sum of mon-

Reason for rule

(1) The reasons given for the necessity of a scire facias are that new parties are to be affected by the execution, and that these new parties should have a day in court to show cause, if any they can, against the application of their property to the discharge of the judgment.—Wallace v. Swinton, 64 N.Y. 188—23 C.J. p 382 note 33.

Failure of administrator to petition for sale of realty

Where administrator's petition to sell decedent's realty was not filed within the year immediately following decedent's death, administrator's petition for a stay of proceedings, instituted by judgment creditor more than a year after decedent's death, for an order permitting the issuance of an execution on his judgment, came too late.—*Coats v. Conditional order

Where proper case existed for issuance of execution under statute authorizing issuance of execution against property on which judgment is lien after judgment debtor has been dead a year, circuit court was without authority to impose condition that execution issue against certain property only and that full amount of judgment be bid for such property.—State ex rel. Rasmussen v. Circuit Court for Kenosha County, 269 N.W. 265, 222 Wis. 628.

Order of court unnecessary

After judgment has been revived against the executors who hold, by the terms of the will, the legal title to the lands belonging to the estate, no resort to the probate court is necessary, either for a classification of plaintiff's demand or for an order for the sale of the property, for execution against such lands as are bound by the lien of the judgment.—Mendenhall v. Bunette, 49 P. 93, 58 Kan. 355.

40. Wis.—In re Hogan's Estate, 282 N.W. 5, 229 Wis. 600—State ex rel. Rasmussen v. Circuit Court for Kenosha County, 269 N.W. 265, 222 Wis. 628.

ey has been rendered, execution may issue against any property on which the judgment is a lien, the moving papers should show facts supporting a lien of the judgment, and a simple allegation of its existence is insufficient.⁴¹ If execution is to be issued against the real estate of a deceased judgment debtor, the petition to the surrogate should show that the personal property is insufficient to pay the debts, and it is good practice to set out a description of the real estate sought to be subjected to the satisfaction of the judgment.⁴²

(2) Validity of Writ Irregularly Issued

An execution issued and tested after the death of defendant without reviving the judgment by scire facias, or issued and tested in violation of statute, is generally void.

An execution issued and tested after the death of a sole defendant without reviving the judgment by scire facias, or issued and tested in violation of statute, is generally an absolute nullity, and is so far void that the officer to whom it is directed need not obey it, and a purchaser thereunder acquires no title; and it can be attacked collaterally as well as directly,⁴³ and cannot be relied on even for the purpose of continuing the judgment and keeping it alive.⁴⁴ In a number of decisions, however, the writ is held to be merely voidable.⁴⁵

c. Several Plaintiffs or Defendants

Where one or more joint plaintiffs or defendants dies after the rendition of judgment and before issuance of execution, execution may generally issue in favor of, or against, the survivors without revival by scire facias; the execution should issue in the names of all the parties in the judgment, including the names of the deceased parties.

Statute staying execution for a certain time after the death of defendant applies only where a sole defendant dies; and consequently where there is more than one defendant, and one of them dies, an execution may nevertheless be issued immediately for the purpose of seizing the property of the survivors.—Day v. Although there is authority to the contrary,⁴⁶ as a general rule where one or more of several joint plaintiffs or defendants in the judgment dies after rendition thereof and before issuance of execution the execution may issue in favor of⁴⁷ or against⁴⁸ the survivors without revival by scire facias. It has been held that this is not the rule where the real estate of the survivor is to be subjected;⁴⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁰

The creditor may revive against the decedent's representative to increase his security.⁵¹

Form of writ. To conform to the judgment, the execution should issue in the name of all the parties plaintiff or defendant in the judgment, including deceased parties whether plaintiff⁵² or defendant;⁵³ but it is not necessary that a writ which is issued in the name of all the parties defendant should suggest the death of any of such parties.⁵⁴ An issuance in the name of part of the judgment debtors without reciting the death of one has been held to render the execution void on its face;⁵⁵ but there is authority that such an execution is merely voidable.⁵⁶

If the death is suggested on the clerk's docket, execution may be taken out in the name of the survivors.⁵⁷

d. Death after Execution Is Awarded

the common-law rule, and under some statutes, be served on his goods in the hands of his executor or administrator.⁵⁸ It has been held, however, that the sheriff cannot proceed unless the execution is both sued out and levied before such death,⁵⁹ unless it is otherwise provided by statute.⁶⁰

If plaintiff dies after execution is awarded, the execution does not abate but the sheriff may nevertheless proceed.⁶¹

e. Writ Tested before Death

In the absence of statute to the contrary, a writ of execution may be issued after the death of either party, where it was tested before death.

If an execution is tested in defendant's lifetime, it may be taken out against his goods after his death where there is no statute requiring the writ to bear teste as of the day of its issuance.⁶² The theory or fiction on which this result is arrived at is that the execution is taken in judgment of law to have been issued at the time it bears date, however the fact may have been, and that being prior to the death of defendant, and the goods being bound from the teste or presumed issuing, execution on them is deemed to have commenced in the lifetime of the party, and, being an entire thing, may be completed notwithstanding his death.⁶³ Consequently goods only, it would seem, can be taken on an execution so issued, and not lands,⁶⁴ although some cases apply the same rule to lands.⁶⁵ The judgment must be actually signed before the death of defendant.⁶⁶

The doctrine of relation does not obtain where by statute it is required that the writ shall bear teste of the day on which it is issued, and consequently, after defendant's death judgment must be revived by scire facias or the writ must be sued out in the mode prescribed by statute.⁶⁷

Before plaintiff's death. At common law it was permissible to issue an execution after plaintiff's death, provided such execution bore teste as of a day prior to his death,⁶⁸ but in some states this rule has been changed by statute.⁶⁹

f. Writ Tested after Death

In the absence of statute to the contrary, an execution which bears teste subsequent to the death of defendant is generally void.

In the absence of statute to the contrary, an execution which bears teste subsequent to the death of defendant is generally held void,⁷⁰ although in some states it has been held merely voidable.⁷¹

issuance when recorded by the court is binding on the parties.⁷⁴

Time which must elapse. Unless execution is stayed, or there is a statute otherwise providing, execution may issue immediately after the rendition of judgment,⁷⁵ subject to the rules in particular jurisdictions, discussed § 9 supra, as to the necessity for entry or docketing of judgment.

However, execution cannot issue pending a motion to show cause why execution should not issue,⁷⁶ nor can it issue on a judgment by default before the declaration is filed;⁷⁷ and in some jurisdictions there are statutory provisions forbidding the issuance of an execution until the expiration of a certain period of time,⁷⁸ although a provision limiting the time within which execution may issue, being for the benefit of the judgment debtor, may be waived by him.⁷⁹ Failure to tax a bill of costs does not invalidate, as being prematurely issued, an execution.⁸⁰ Where the amount owing is fixed by final decree, the pendency of a claim or bill by another does not require a delay of execution.⁸¹

According to the practice in some jurisdictions a final judgment is not entered until the lapse of a certain number of days after the rule for judgment nisi, during which time defendant may move for a rule to show cause or present a writ of error, and execution cannot issue.⁸²

Effect of premature issuance. It is generally held that a premature issuance of an execution is an irregularity which may render the execution voidable but which does not render it void,⁸³ although there is authority to the effect that an execution prematurely issued is void.⁸⁴

Judgment payable in installments. Where a judgment is payable in installments falling due at different periods, an execution may be issued for each installment as it becomes due;⁸⁵ but plaintiff, if he sees fit to do so, may wait until a number of installments have fallen due, and may include whatever is due at the time of issuing the writ in one execution without issuing an execution for each installment.⁸⁶

Duty of officer to act promptly. The officer charged with the duty of issuing writs of execution must proceed to issue the same with reasonable celerity.⁸⁷ Ordinarily, it would seem that all that he is required to do is to issue them in time to be served by the return day therein named.⁸⁸

b. Time within Which Execution Must Be Issued

The time within which original execution must be issued is generally fixed by statute.

At common law plaintiff who had recovered a judgment in a personal action could neither sue out his original execution nor revive the judgment by scire facias after the lapse of a year and a day, but he was obliged to bring an original action in which he could offer the judgment as evidence of the debt.⁸⁹ In real actions, however, where

Scire facias to revive judgment see land was recovered, demandant after the year might take out scire facias to revive his judgment.⁹⁰ To make the form of the procedure more uniform the Statute of Westminster II (13 Edw. I) gave scire facias to plaintiff in a personal action to revive his judgment where he had omitted to sue execution within the year after judgment was obtained.⁹¹ The reason for forbidding the issuance without a scire facias after the lapse of a year has been said to be that a presumption is raised that the judgment was satisfied,⁹² yet it may be more accurate to say that the lapse of time afforded some evidence or some probability of satisfaction.⁹³

The rule requiring scire facias to the debtor, if the original execution did not issue for a year after the rendition of the judgment, was generally adopted by the states of this country without any distinction as to the personal or real actions,⁹⁴

but, as is observed infra in this subdivision, statutes now generally fix the time within which execution must issue.

The fact that the creditor has a lien on certain real estate of the debtor, created by attachment, does not excuse the failure of the creditor to sue out the writ within the year and a day, where the existence of such prior lien does not operate as a stay of execution, and the creditor is at liberty to sue out the writ and have satisfaction out of other property if any can be found.⁹⁵

Time fixed by statute. The time within which the original execution must be issued is now generally fixed by statute,⁹⁶ and in the absence of any showing to that effect, it will not be presumed that the time within which an execution may properly issue has expired.⁹⁷ Delay is no ground for refusing the writ where the statutory time for the issuance of the execution has not elapsed,⁹⁸ and an execution may be issued within the time fixed by statute, although the lien of the judgment has expired.⁹⁹

While according to some authorities statutes of limitation applicable to actions and actions on judgments govern the time within which execution must issue,¹ it has also been held that a limitation as to actions, prescribing the time within which actions on judgments must be brought, is not applicable to the remedy by execution,² and hence a statute may authorize an execution after an action on the judgment is barred by limitation.³

A statute limiting the time within which an execution may be issued, relates wholly to the remedy, and applies to executions on all judgments, whether rendered before or after its enactment.⁴ A statute extending the time within which executions may issue is likewise remedial and applies to all judgments against which, at the time of its passage, no limitation statute had actually run.⁵ However, a statute providing that the time during which defendant is absent from the state should not be computed as a part of the period within which an action must be brought has been held not to extend the time for the issuance of an execution on a judgment rendered prior to the effective date of the statute.⁶ Some jurisdictions have a period within which execution may issue as of course, which period cannot be extended by leave of court.⁷

Effect of delayed issuance. As a general rule, an execution issued after the lapse of more than a year and a day after judgment, without revival by scire facias, or after the lapse of the statutory period, without taking the steps prescribed by statute, is voidable merely, and not void, and all acts done under it before it is set aside are valid;⁸ but there are some authorities to the contrary.⁹ An execution issued after the lapse of a year and a day, or after the expiration of the statutory period, is a justification to the sheriff or other officer to whom it is directed, and it is his duty to perform its mandate.¹⁰

Waiver. The judgment debtor may waive his right to object to a delay in issuing a writ of execution.¹¹

from the rendition,¹² entry,¹³ or docketing¹⁴ of the judgment, and under a statute so providing, from the date of the last payment thereon.¹⁵ On a judgment payable in installments, the period runs from the time when each installment falls due.¹⁶

An order of revivor made necessary by the death of the judgment debtor is not to be considered as a new judgment, and notwithstanding such order of revivor the time within which an execution is issuable is to be computed from the date of the original judgment.¹⁷

(2) Suspension of Running of Time

In computing the time limited for suing out an execution, the time during which execution is stayed should be excluded, and the time will be extended by any delay occasioned by the debtor.

Although there is authority to the contrary,¹⁸ in computing the time limited for suing out an execution, as a general rule, sometimes by reason of express statutory regulation, there should not be included the time when execution is stayed,¹⁹ either by agreement of the parties for a definite time,²⁰ by injunction,²¹ by the taking of an appeal or writ of error so as to operate as a supersedeas,²² or by the death of a party.²³ Any interruption or delay occasioned by the debtor will extend the time within which the writ may be issued without scire facias.²⁴ A period during which the judgment was satisfied by a sale of lands under a decree, the sale afterward being set aside, cannot be included.²⁵

On the other hand, an action in equity by a judgment creditor to subject property to the satisfaction of the judgment does not suspend the right to issue execution, so as to lengthen the time.²⁶ A partial payment of the judgment does not arrest the running of the statutory time.²⁷

Nonresidence. In some jurisdictions, by statute, the length of time defendant has been a non-resident of the state is not to be computed;²⁸ but a statute stopping the running of limitations on the commencement of actions while defendant is a nonresident has been held not to apply to executions.²⁹

it is placed where it may be executed and some efficient act done under it.³¹

The writ, while it remains in the clerk's office, is not issued,³² but it must be actually or constructively delivered to the sheriff or other proper officer before it can properly be said to have been issued.³³ Moreover, such delivery must be unconditional and unlimited,³⁴ with the intent to have the officer execute it.³⁵ A delivery with instructions to do nothing is no delivery.³⁶ The writ must be delivered personally to the officer or one acting for him,³⁷ or left at his office,³⁸ and leaving it at the sheriff's residence in his absence is not a delivery to him.³⁹ Delivery to the deputy is equivalent in law to a delivery to the sheriff himself.⁴⁰

Evidence of delivery. By statute, in some states, the officer to whom the writ is directed is required to indorse on the writ a memorandum of the day, hour, and minute when he receives it,⁴¹ and, where there are two or more executions against the same person, to number them in the order of their precedence.⁴² A sheriff's indorsement on an execution of the hour of leaving it is conclusive that the writ was in his hands at that time.⁴³ Such statutes are merely directory and are intended to facilitate proof as to the time of the delivery of the writ, and to prevent confusion among different executions; and when such memorandum is not made, the date of the delivery may be proved by parol.⁴⁴

The usual presumptions in favor of official acts are applicable,⁴⁵ and unless the contrary appears it will be presumed that the writ was delivered to the sheriff on the day the levy was made.⁴⁶

§ 68. — Recording

Unless required by statute, writs of execution need not be recorded or indexed.

In the absence of a statutory requirement, recording or indexing of writs of execution is not a prerequisite to their validity.⁴⁷ However, such writs must be recorded or indexed where the statute so directs.⁴⁸

Under some statutes writs of execution must be recorded or indexed before they can be executed against real estate.⁴⁹ This requirement, however, is only for the protection of innocent third persons who may acquire a contractual lien on the property affected, and is not necessary as between the parties.⁵⁰

The absence of an entry in the execution record or index is not indisputable proof that a particular writ never existed, but is at best a negative showing that arises from the presumption that the official has not disobeyed his duty.⁵¹

Execution issued to another county

A statute, which provides that, when an execution is issued to the sheriff of any county other than where the judgment was rendered, the sheriff, among other things, shall deliver the writ to the clerk of the district court of his county, who shall enter the same in the execution docket, is for the protection of bona fide purchasers from an execution debtor and nothing more.—Thrush v. § 69. Form and Contents of Writ

As a general rule, in the absence of statutory requirements, a writ of execution is sufficient if it is in the form sanctioned by general usage, and technical objections should be disregarded.

As a general rule, in the absence of statutory requirements, a writ of execution is sufficient if it is in the form sanctioned by general usage, and technical objections should be disregarded.⁵² Statutes prescribing the form and contents of executions should be followed,⁵³ and if the execution contains all that is required by statute it is sufficient.⁵⁴ Indeed, it is sufficient if the statutory form is substantially followed.⁵⁵

The execution should disclose on its face the authority to issue it.⁵⁶ The fact that an original execution is expressed to be an alias does not vary the legal effect of the writ.⁵⁷ Where courts of chancery are authorized to issue executions on decrees for the payment of money, executions issued on such decrees must follow and conform to the writs issued by courts of law.⁵⁸

An execution need not be written on a single sheet of paper, and if it is on several sheets it is sufficient that they are pinned together.⁵⁹

Unnecessary recitals. Unnecessary recitals in the writ are ordinarily treated as surplusage and are not allowed to vitiate the writ.⁶⁰ Thus unnecessary recitals of proceedings in the action previous to final judgment do not affect the regularity of the execution.⁶¹

§ 70. — Conformity to Judgment

An execution must conform to the judgment on which it is issued in every essential particular, but an immaterial variance does not vitiate the writ.

An execution must conform to the judgment on which it is issued⁶² in every essential particular.⁶³ However, a variance between the judgment and the execution does not necessarily vitiate the execution,⁶⁴ particularly where the variance is not substantial,⁶⁵ and the judgment can readily be identified from the execution.⁶⁶ However, the variance between the execution and the judgment on which it is issued may be so material as to render the execution fatally defective.⁶⁷

Clerical mistakes. Mere clerical mistakes do not render the execution void, but at the most only voidable.⁶⁸

§ 71. — Name in Which Writ Should Run

A writ of execution is required to run in the name of the state or people but an irregularity in this respect generally does not render the writ void.

Executions are directed to the sheriff or other officer, not by the court, but by the sovereign;⁷⁰ and in many states the writ is required, by either the constitution or statutes, to run in the name of the state or people.⁷¹ An irregularity in this respect generally does not render the writ void,⁷² although there is authority to the contrary.⁷³

The use of the term "territory" instead of "state" is a mere irregularity.⁷⁴

§ 72. — Direction to Officer

An execution must be directed to the proper officer, but an irregularity in this respect is not necessarily fatal.

The direction in the writ to the officer, usually the sheriff, is what gives him his authority,⁷⁵ except in so far as otherwise provided by statute.⁷⁶

An execution must be directed to the officer designated by the applicable statute.⁷⁷ Ordinarily the writ should be directed to the sheriff in office at the time of its issuance.⁷⁸ Where an execution is intended to be delivered to, and levied by, the sheriff of another county than that in which the judgment was rendered, it must be directed to the sheriff of such other county.⁷⁹

Under some statutes, where an officer other than the sheriff serves the original process on which judgment is rendered, the execution must be directed to, and served by, the same officer,⁸⁰ although the cause for directing the original process to him has ceased.⁸¹ At common law, however, an execution need not necessarily be directed to the same officer as the one who served the mesne process.⁸²

If the direction is defective in not designating the officer to execute the writ, the defect is not material where what is lacking appears in another part of the writ⁸³ or from an accompanying instrument.⁸⁴ The fact that the direction does not exactly conform to the statutory requirement is not necessarily fatal.⁸⁵ The fact that an execution was directed to an improper officer cannot be objected to by a stranger.⁸⁶

Disqualification of regular officer. When the sheriff is a party or otherwise disqualified, the writ should be directed to someone else, usually to the coroner;⁸⁷ or, if he is disqualified, to another officer.⁸⁸ The writ should be directed to the coroner when there is a vacancy in the office of sheriff.⁸⁹ In some jurisdictions the writ should contain a suggestion of the disqualification or nonexistence of the officer whose prior right and duty it is to act,⁹⁰ but the omission to make this appear on the face of the writ is not fatal.⁹¹

Where the sheriff is disqualified, the coroner or other officer has no power to execute the writ unless it is directed to him,⁹² and consequently cannot be held liable for not executing a writ not directed to him.⁹³ An execution directed to the "coroner or jailer," where the sheriff is disqualified, cannot be executed by the jailer since the presumption is that the coroner is not disqualified.⁹⁴

To person whose term of office has expired. It is a general rule that an officer who commences the execution of process must complete it, even though his term of office may have expired before such completion.⁹⁵ This rule applies to a venditioni exponas.⁹⁶ The reason of such a rule is apparent where chattels have been seized; the seizure vests the property in the sheriff.⁹⁷ Such a reason is wanting in case of a levy on land,⁹⁸ and while the rule has nevertheless been applied in such a case,⁹⁹ the better rule is that the venditioni may be directed either to the sheriff who made the levy or to the sheriff in office at the time.¹

Where a judgment is recovered in a suit commenced by attachment, an execution issued on such judgment, according to some authorities, should be directed to, and levied by, the sheriff in office at the time of the issuance of the writ and not to the sheriff who levied the attachment.² In other decisions, however, it is held that the officer who served the attachment must serve the fieri facias.³

§ 73. — Recital and Description of Judgment

The execution must intelligibly refer to the judgment on which it is based and it should identify the court which rendered the judgment and recite the date of the judgment, but irregularities in these respects are not necessarily fatal.

The execution must intelligibly refer to the judgment on which it is based.⁴ This part of the execution should have the precision of the judgment itself;⁵ but it is not essential to the validity of an execution that the utmost possible strictness should be observed in reciting the judgment,⁶ and the general rule is that the failure to recite the judgment accurately does not render the writ void, as long as it can be clearly and unmistakably identified with the judgment purported to be recited, the process in such case being merely irregular.⁷ Where the judgment cannot be identified from the recital the writ is void.⁸

Recital of court which rendered the judgment. The writ must identify the court which rendered the judgment.⁹ A judgment of the appellate court, although sent to the lower court for execution, should be described as a judgment of the appellate court.¹⁰ However, an execution issued on the filing of the transcript of a lower court may describe the judgment as one of the court from which the execution issues.¹¹ A misdescription of the court does not necessarily render the execution void as distinguished from voidable,¹² unless the execution cannot be identified from the recital.¹³

Jurisdiction of court. An execution issued by a court of limited or inferior jurisdiction need not show on its face that the court had jurisdiction to render the judgment.¹⁴

Execution after defendant's death. An execution issued after the death of defendant should show its authority from both the original judgment and the judgment of revivor.¹⁵

Date of rendition or docketing. An execution should recite the date of the judgment.¹⁶ It is proper to recite the judgment as of the date of its rendition notwithstanding the subsequent amendment of the judgment nunc pro tunc.¹⁷ If judgment is not rendered until after a motion for a new trial is overruled at a succeeding term, the writ properly describes the judgment as rendered at the later term.¹⁸

By the strict rule which formerly prevailed, a misrecital as to the term in which a judgment was rendered made the writ void.¹⁹ Under the modern rule, however, as long as the judgment may be identified, a mistake in the date of the rendition of the judgment,²⁰ or even an omission of the date,²¹ does not make the execution void. This is especially true where the execution follows a misrecital of the record which afterward is amended.²² An execution issued to a county in which the judgment has been docketed, which fails to state, as required by statute, the time and place of the docketing of the judgment, is not void, but is amendable.²³

Place of filing judgment roll. Failure to state the county where the judgment roll was filed, as required by statute, does not make the execution void, where it is stated in the execution that the judgment was recovered in the superior court of a certain county named.²⁴

§ 74. — Recital and Description of Parties

The execution must follow the judgment with respect to the recitals and description of the parties, but irregularities in this respect generally do not render the writ void if the parties as recited in the writ can be plainly identified with those of the judgment.

The general rule, stated supra § 70, that the execution must follow the judgment applies with peculiar fitness to the recitals and description of the parties,²⁵ even where the judgment contains a misrecital as to the parties.²⁶ However, if the parties as recited in the writ can be plainly identified with those of the judgment, the general rule is that mistakes or omissions or other irregularities in this respect do not render the writ void.²⁷ An execution against a certain person "agent for"²⁸ or "executor"²⁹ is an execution against the first person alone, the added words being descriptive personae.

An execution cannot issue against a person whose first name is described as fictitious.³⁰

Addition of name. The addition of a name to the execution which did not appear in the judgment has been held not to vitiate the writ;³¹ but as against the person whose name is thus added it is void.³²

Omissions. While the omission of plaintiff's name from the recital of the parties may not vitiate the writ where plaintiff's identity can be fairly made out from the rest of the writ,³³ as where his name appears in the indorsement of the writ,³⁴ an execution on a money judgment which does not show against whose property it is sent is void.³⁵ In some jurisdictions the entire omission of the name of plaintiff makes the writ void.³⁶

Where the judgment is joint, the execution issued thereon should be joint,³⁷ and this is so notwithstanding, from death or some other cause, no levy can be made on the property of some of the judgment debtors.³⁸ Where there is a plurality of parties plaintiff, the execution should not be issued in the name of one of them only, but should be issued in the name of all plaintiffs.³⁹ However, the rule that an execution, to enforce a joint judgment, must be joint cannot be allowed to work an injustice,⁴⁰ and the omission of the name of plaintiff,⁴¹ or of defendant,⁴² does not render the writ void as long as the writ can be clearly identified with the judgment, at least as against a bona fide purchaser,⁴³ although under some statutes, a several execution issued on a joint judgment is void.⁴⁴

In an action against joint defendants, where separate decrees are rendered against each, an execution may be issued against one of them without issuing the same against the other.⁴⁵ An execution against two for a sum which the writ recites plaintiff has recovered against "him" is void because uncertain as against whom the judgment was rendered.⁴⁶ An execution commanding its satisfaction out of the property of several named persons is not objectionable because it refers to the judgment as obtained against one of them "and others."⁴⁷

Mistakes and misdescriptions. A mistake in the name of a party plaintiff⁴⁸ or defendant⁴⁹ does not invalidate the writ, provided the identity of such party is not left in doubt, and the variance is not so great that the execution appears not to be issued on the judgment produced in its support,⁵⁰ except where a mandatory statute requires the execution to state correctly the names of the parties.⁵¹ In any event, the writ is not void as against such of the parties whose names are correctly recited.⁵² However, an execution which varies from the judgment in the names of both plaintiffs and defendants cannot be identified with the judgment and is void.⁵³

A misrecital of the party plaintiff as an individual instead of as an administrator,⁵⁴ or as obligee instead of an assignee of an instrument,⁵⁵ has

Incidental parties

Execution was not invalid because not naming other defendants against whom judgment was rendered, where it appeared that judgment was rendered against defendant named in execution alone, and that other defendants were named only that any claim or right asserted by them to property foreclosed on would be eliminated by such foreclosure.—Alcorn v. been held to render the writ void. Yet where defendants were misdescribed as "executors," the term "executors" did not affect the validity of an execution issued against them in their individual capacity.⁵⁶ Failure to follow the judgment in not describing defendants as makers and indorsers does not render the execution void.⁵⁷ Where a judgment is rendered in favor of a guardian, execution issuing in the name of the infant does not follow the judgment.⁵⁸

Assignment of judgment. An execution, issued by the assignees of a judgment, has been held not to be defective in omitting the name of an assignee of part of a share of one of the original assignees.⁵⁹

Execution on judgment recovered in suit by nominal plaintiff. Where a judgment is recovered by a nominal plaintiff for the use of another, the execution should conform to the judgment and should be issued in behalf of the nominal plaintiff for the use of the usee;⁶⁰ and should not issue in favor of both the nominal plaintiff and the usee as if they were joint plaintiffs.⁶¹ An execution which issues in the name of the usee does not follow the judgment⁶² and has been held void,⁶³ although there are decisions to the contrary;⁶⁴ and under modern statutes execution may be issued directly in favor of the beneficial plaintiff.⁶⁵

Where judgment has been rendered in favor of the beneficial plaintiff, an execution in favor of the nominal plaintiff for the use of the beneficial plaintiff does not conform to the judgment.⁶⁶ An execution on a judgment in favor of one for the use of another is not void because the latter recital was omitted.⁶⁷

Judgment by or against partnership. The failure of an execution describing a judgment recovered by a partnership to include the individual names of the partners is not a fatal defect.⁶⁸

Where a judgment is recovered against a partnership, and the individual partners have not been served with process, and no judgment has been recovered against them individually, the writ must follow the judgment and be issued against the firm and not against the partners.⁶⁹ An execution against the firm and against the individual members thereof is not variant from the judgment because it does not state that the individuals named are members of the firm, although such statement is contained in the judgment.⁷⁰

The execution must state the sum of money to be made and in so doing must conform to the judgment, but a variance in amount not sufficient to destroy the identity of the judgment does not invalidate the writ.

The execution must state the sum of money to be made,⁷¹ and in doing so must follow and conform to the judgment.⁷² However, a variance in amount between the execution and the judgment, which is not sufficient to destroy the identity of the judgment on which the writ issued, does not render the writ void, but voidable only, especially where the variance is small, and is due to a clerical error, or to a miscalculation of the amount remaining due on the judgment.⁷³ The validity of the execution should be tested by the intent with which it was issued; if issued for a wrong amount with fraudulent intent, it is void;⁷⁴ but in the absence of fraudulent intent an execution for a less amount,⁷⁵ or even an execution for a greater amount,⁷⁶ is generally held not void. Where the writ issues for too large an amount, the proper practice is not to move for a vacation of the writ, but to move to set aside to the extent of the excess;⁷⁷ or, if the levy is on land, for the aggrieved party to go into equity for relief.⁷⁸

If an amount materially in excess of the judgment is commanded to be made, the writ, according to some authorities, is void, and, where but one levy on, and sale of, property are made under such an execution, and an amount materially exceeding the judgment is realized, the entire proceedings under the writ are nugatory.⁷⁹ Nevertheless, where the levy and sale is for the amount actually due on the judgment, the error in the writ will be corrected without setting aside or declaring nugatory the proceedings under the execution.⁸⁰

After partial payment of judgment. The writ should not issue for a greater amount than is due on the judgment at the time of its issuance.⁸¹ The writ should either recite the judgment as it was originally recovered, and state the amount that has been paid and the sum that is still due,⁸² or be issued for the whole amount of the judgment, with the credit indorsed on the back of the writ,⁸³ it being immaterial which course is pursued.⁸⁴ However, where the record does not show, and the clerk of the court did not know, that anything had been paid on the judgment, an execution issued for the full amount of the judgment is neither void nor irregular.⁸⁵ An execution not showing a credit is not void but may be quashed only to the extent of the excess.⁸⁶

Judgment payable in installments. Where the judgment is payable in installments, an execution issued before they have all fallen due should not command the sheriff to levy the whole debt, but only the amount that has accrued.⁸⁷

b. Interest

The execution, in commanding the collection of interest on the judgment, must conform to the judgment, but a variance does not render the writ void and where interest on judgments is allowed by statute execution for interest may generally issue whether or not it is allowed in the judgment.

The execution, in commanding the collection of interest on the judgment, must conform to the judgment.⁸⁸ A variance between the judgment and the writ, as respects the collection of interest, does not render the writ absolutely null and void, but voidable only, and it may be amended, and the irregularity is not available on collateral attack, it being like the case of any other variance in amount between the writ and judgment.⁸⁹

Except where a different practice has arisen so as to become part of the common law,⁹⁰ the writ should not require the collection of interest when the judgment on which it is issued does not give it, and interest is not allowed by statute.⁹¹ This has been held to be the rule even where interest on judgments is allowed by statute, if the judgment does not include it;⁹² but, as a general rule, where interest on judgments is allowed by statute, execution for interest may issue whether or not it is allowed in the judgment,⁹³ and the addition of interest since the rendition of the judgment does not constitute a variance.⁹⁴

c. Costs

The execution should correspond to the judgment as respects the allowance of costs, and the amount thereof, but irregularities in this respect generally do not render the writ void.

The execution should correspond to the judgment as respects the allowance of costs⁹⁵ and the amount thereof.⁹⁶ Mistakes as to the amount of costs usually do not invalidate the writ.⁹⁷

It is sometimes provided by statute that a copy of the bill of costs shall be attached to, or indorsed on, the execution.⁹⁸ Although there is some contrary authority,⁹⁹ such statutes usually are directory only and irregularities do not render the writ void.¹

The failure of the clerk to enter in the formal judgment the items of cost taxed by him, as required by statute does not render void or voidable an execution containing such costs.²

§ 76. — Command to Levy and Make Amount

The writ should command the officer to whom it is directed to make a levy, but it need not in express words command a sale.

The writ of execution should command the officer to whom it is directed by appropriate words of command or direction, to make a levy;³ but the execution need not, in express words, command a sale, but need only require the sheriff to make the money, etc.⁴ The fact that the command of the writ does not follow exactly the order of the court,⁵ or the form of the statute,⁶ or that in the command the amount of the sum to be made is left blank,⁷ or that the command to dispose of the goods was omitted,⁸ does not render the writ void.

§ 77. — Directions as to Property to Be Taken

- a. In general
- b. Specifying particular property

a. In General

The modern form of the general fieri facias generally permits the real estate as well as the goods and chattels of defendant to be taken and if there is a special statute governing, its terms must be complied with.

The modern form of the general fieri facias generally permits the real estate as well as the goods and chattels of defendant to be taken.⁹ If there is a special statute governing, its terms must be complied with.¹⁰ However, failure to comply with a statute requiring that the sheriff's authority to levy be limited to property subject to execution does not render a writ fatally defective.¹¹

If goods and chattels only can be taken, the writ should not direct a levy on lands and tenements as well as goods and chattels;¹² but where plaintiff has the right to levy on lands and tenements, the writ ought to pursue the law and direct a levy on property of that character, and not a levy on chattels only.¹³ It is no objection that the execution directed the sheriff to levy on lands of defendant of which he was seized on a certain day, although the direction might have been given as of a few days before.¹⁴

The execution, in commanding the collection of interest on the judgment, must conform to the judgment, but a variance does not render the writ void and where interest on judgments is allowed by statute execution for interest may generally issue whether or not it is allowed in the judgment.

The execution, in commanding the collection of interest on the judgment, must conform to the judgment.⁸⁸ A variance between the judgment and the writ, as respects the collection of interest, does not render the writ absolutely null and void, but voidable only, and it may be amended, and the irregularity is not available on collateral attack, it being like the case of any other variance in amount between the writ and judgment.⁸⁹

Except where a different practice has arisen so as to become part of the common law,⁹⁰ the writ should not require the collection of interest when the judgment on which it is issued does not give it, and interest is not allowed by statute.⁹¹ This has been held to be the rule even where interest on judgments is allowed by statute, if the judgment does not include it;⁹² but, as a general rule, where interest on judgments is allowed by statute, execution for interest may issue whether or not it is allowed

c. Costs

The execution should correspond to the judgment as respects the allowance of costs, and the amount thereof, but irregularities in this respect generally do not render the writ void.

The execution should correspond to the judgment as respects the allowance of costs⁹⁵ and the amount thereof.⁹⁶ Mistakes as to the amount of costs usually do not invalidate the writ.⁹⁷

It is sometimes provided by statute that a copy of the bill of costs shall be attached to, or indorsed on, the execution.⁹⁸ Although there is some contrary authority,⁹⁹ such statutes usually are directory only and irregularities do not render the writ void.¹

The failure of the clerk to enter in the formal judgment the items of cost taxed by him, as required by statute does not render void or voidable an execution containing such costs.²

§ 76. — Command to Levy and Make Amount

The writ should command the officer to whom it is directed to make a levy, but it need not in express words command a sale.

The writ of execution should command the officer to whom it is directed by appropriate words of command or direction, to make a levy;³ but the execution need not, in express words, command a sale, but need only require the sheriff to make the money, etc.⁴ The fact that the command of the writ does not follow exactly the order of the court,⁵ or the form of the statute,⁶ or that in the command the amount of the sum to be made is left blank,⁷ or that the command to dispose of the goods was omitted,⁸ does not render the writ void.

§ 77. — Directions as to Property to Be Taken

- a. In general
- b. Specifying particular property

a. In General

The modern form of the general fieri facias generally permits the real estate as well as the goods and chattels of defendant to be taken and if there is a special statute governing, its terms must be complied with.

The modern form of the general fieri facias generally permits the real estate as well as the goods and chattels of defendant to be taken.⁹ If there is a special statute governing, its terms must be complied with.¹⁰ However, failure to comply with a statute requiring that the sheriff's authority to levy be limited to property subject to execution does not render a writ fatally defective.¹¹

If goods and chattels only can be taken, the writ should not direct a levy on lands and tenements as well as goods and chattels;¹² but where plaintiff has the right to levy on lands and tenements, the writ ought to pursue the law and direct a levy on property of that character, and not a levy on chattels only.¹³ It is no objection that the execution directed the sheriff to levy on lands of defendant of which he was seized on a certain day, although the direction might have been given as of a few days before.¹⁴

Personal property first. Under statutes so providing, the writ must direct a levy on personal property first,¹⁵ except where a special provision is otherwise made by law,¹⁶ but failure so to do renders the writ merely informal and not void.¹⁷

Property attached. Where a warrant of attachment has been levied, statutes in some jurisdictions expressly provide as to the property to be taken under execution.¹⁸ If the summons was not served personally and the judgment debtor did not appear in the action, the writ should direct that the judgment be satisfied out of the attached property alone.¹⁹

In some states it has been held that a sheriff is bound to levy on the proceeds of the sale of goods attached, even without special directions.²⁰

Homesteads and exemptions. The writ, in commanding a levy on the debtor's property, need not inhibit the sheriff from levying on the debtor's homestead or other property exempt from execution, since the sheriff is bound to know that he cannot take such property.²¹ However, where there has been a waiver of exemption, it should appear in the body of the writ or by indorsement thereon.²²

b. Specifying Particular Property

Ordinarily, in the absence of statute or agreement to the contrary, when a judgment is recovered in an action at law for a sum of money, the writ should not specify any particular property to be levied on.

Ordinarily, in the absence of any statute or agreement to the contrary, when a judgment is recovered in an action at law for a sum of money, the writ should not undertake to specify any particular property to be levied on.²³ However, the writ may command the levy to be made on property in the officer's county, although not referred to in the statute concerning the form of the writ.²⁴

When a judgment is directed against particular property the execution should conform to the judgment by designating such property as the property to be levied on.²⁵ Where a writ against specific property is proper, the description should sufficiently identify the property.²⁶ However, a description, although loose, which follows the judgment is not void for uncertainty.²⁷ It has been held sufficient to designate the property as that "recovered in this suit," where it is described in the judgment.²⁸

When an execution in the common form is issued instead of a special writ, if in point of fact no other property is taken and sold than that which the judgment authorized to be taken and sold, the writ is not void, but voidable only, and the sale thereunder will be upheld.²⁹ As a general rule, where an execution contains both specific commands which it ought to contain, and also improper general commands, the writ will be sustained provided the specific commands alone are performed, as the general commands may be treated as surplusage.³⁰

Where a general writ is the proper writ to be issued, it has been held that a special writ issued instead is merely voidable and not void,³¹ although it has also been held that such writ is void.³²

§ 78. — Directions for Return

It is generally required that the return day be stated in the writ, but an irregularity in this respect ordinarily does not render the writ void.

The return day of the execution is generally required to be stated in it for the certainty and regularity of the proceedings, but mainly for the security of the rights of the party entitled to the fruits of it.³³ By the common law, and in those jurisdictions in which the return day is not fixed by statute, the proper practice is to make the writ returnable in term time during the term next succeeding its issuance;³⁴ but the intervention of a term is not material.³⁵

By statutes in many states the rule of the common law has been changed regarding the time at which an execution should be made returnable, and in such cases the writ should be made returnable in accordance with the applicatory statute.³⁶ Where a designated number of days is required to elapse between the issuance of the writ and the return day, the day of its issuance is the day when it is placed in the hands of the sheriff to be executed.³⁷

Designation of return day. The return day need not be stated on the face of the writ, but may be contained in an indorsement thereon;³⁸ and it has been held that it may be omitted altogether,³⁹ in which case the writ will be regarded as returnable on the last day on which it might have been made returnable.⁴⁰ If the statute fixes a time within which the officer who executes the writ must make return, a direction to make "due return" thereof or to make return "according to law" is sufficient.⁴¹ If the direction shows when the writ is returnable, the omission of proper words in the direction is immaterial.⁴²

Effect of errors as to the return day. In some jurisdictions it has been held that an execution which is not made returnable at the proper time is void,⁴³ but generally such an execution is not void, but voidable only.⁴⁴ An execution ordinarily is not void where a return is directed within a period less than⁴⁵ or greater than⁴⁶ the period of time fixed by statute. An execution usually is not void where the writ is made returnable out of term,⁴⁷ or on Sunday,⁴⁸ or even where it is made returnable within an impossible year.⁴⁹

Except where it is otherwise provided by statute, a writ of execution should have the proper teste, but the teste is not a material part of the writ, and defects or omissions do not render it void.

Except where it is otherwise provided by statute,⁵⁰ a writ of execution should have the proper teste;⁵¹ but the teste is not a material part of the writ, and defects or omissions do not render it void.⁵² By the ancient English practice a fieri facias should be tested in term time on a day after the judgment was or might be supposed to have been given;⁵³ and, if it was tested out of term, it was void.⁵⁴ However, it has been held that a writ so tested may be amended.⁵⁵

The proper practice generally is to have the writ tested in the name of a judge of the court,⁵⁶ al-

Teste in name of judge disqualified

The fact that teste was not in trial judge's name but in the name of the regular judge of the court who was disqualified to try the case did not render execution void.—Drawdy v. Littlefield, 75 Ga. 215—though under statutory direction the writ must bear teste in the name of the clerk.⁵⁷

b. Date

While the date which the writ should bear is fixed by statute in many states, at common law, where the writ is issued during the term at which the judgment was rendered, it should bear teste as of the first day of the term.

At common law, where the writ is issued during the term at which the judgment was rendered, it should bear teste as of the first day of the term,⁵⁸ since the judgment, when entered during the term, relates back to the first day of the term.⁵⁹ The writ at common law had relation to its teste, and bound the goods and chattels of defendant from that time.⁶⁰ This rule has been changed by statute in many states, and executions are required to be dated as of the day of delivery,⁶¹ or as of the day on which they are actually issued.⁶²

The fact that the year of Christ is omitted when the year of the commonwealth is stated,⁶³ or that the execution is not dated at all,⁶⁴ or that a mistaken or impossible date is given,⁶⁵ does not render the execution void.

c. Signature

Where the rule has not been changed by statute, the writ must be signed by the officer issuing it, and in some jurisdictions, but not in others, the absence of a signature renders the writ void.

Unauthorized signature

(1) Execution to which clerk's name was signed by one not his deputy, and not in his immediate presence and by his direction and authority, was void.—Battle v. Warren County Fertilizer Co., 118 S.E.

Where the rule has not been changed by statute, the writ must be signed by the officer issuing it.⁶⁶ In many jurisdictions signature by the clerk of the court is required,⁶⁷ and in some jurisdictions it is required by statute that the execution shall be signed by the party in whose favor judgment was rendered or by his attorney.⁶⁸

The absence of the required signature renders the writ void in some jurisdictions,⁶⁹ but in other jurisdictions the writ is merely irregular and not void.⁷⁰ The omission of the designation "county clerk" does not render the writ void when the word "clerk" is added to his signature as well as the seal of the court.⁷¹ Where process bears the seal of court and regular teste and is signed by the deputy clerk instead of by the clerk, it has been held unobjectionable,⁷² or at least not void.⁷³

d. Seal

At common law and under some statutes the writ must bear the seal of the court, and according to some authorities, but not others, the absence of a seal renders the writ void.

At common law the writ must bear the seal of the court.⁷⁴ The rule of the common law is declared by statute in some jurisdictions,⁷⁵ although in other jurisdictions statutes dispense with the necessity for a seal, except in the case of writs issued to another county.⁷⁶

ders the writ void, or merely voidable, the authorities are in conflict, and no attempt can be successfully made to reconcile them.⁷⁷ In several jurisdictions, it is held that a writ which is not sealed is absolutely void.⁷⁸ In other jurisdictions it has been held that the omission of the seal is a mere misprision which renders the writ voidable only.⁷⁹

§ 80. — Indorsements

Indorsements on the writ are in some cases required by statute and may be relied on to cure certain defects.

Indorsements on the writ are in some cases required by statute.⁸⁰ Indorsements are considered as a part of the execution and may be looked to for the purpose of curing informalities or defects;⁸¹ but, where an execution is void on its face, an indorsement will not aid fatal defects.⁸²

An indorsement not authorized by the judgment has been held to be so much a part of the writ as to vitiate it,⁸³ but, as a rule, unauthorized indorsements do not affect the writ and may be treated as surplusage.⁸⁴ An indorsement by the clerk on a writ purporting to be an original of "alias" or "pluries" does not affect the character of the writ.⁸⁵ An indorsement of the description of the property attached and of the persons by whom it is replevied on an ordinary fieri facias on a judgment in a suit commenced by attachment does not change the character of the writ.⁸⁶ Where the amount stated in the indorsement varies from that stated in the body of the writ, the latter controls.⁸⁷

The fact that a statutory provision as to indorsements has not been followed generally does not render the writ void,⁸⁸ and this includes the failure of the officer to indorse the time of receiving the writ;⁸⁹ but as to some indorsements required by the statute the contrary has been held.⁹⁰ Proof that the indorsement of the time of the receipt of the writ is in the handwriting of the sheriff is admissible if the time when the writ was in his hands is a material fact in evidence.⁹¹

Conclusiveness. An officer's indorsement which he is required by law to make as to a fact or act or event is generally held to be conclusive.⁹² At any event it is sufficient prima facie evidence to prove the fact.⁹³ Where the indorsement and the sheriff's deed do not agree as to the date of the levy, this is no objection to the admissibility of the execution in evidence.⁹⁴

§ 81. — Alteration or Spoliation of Writ

Ordinarily a material alteration by a party or his attorney invalidates the writ.

Ordinarily a material alteration of the writ, made after its issuance, by a party thereto or his attorney will render the writ void.⁹⁵ However, an alteration will not in every case void the writ,⁹⁶ and, indeed, an alteration may be authorized and proper under certain circumstances.⁹⁷ authority of the clerk,⁹⁹ will not affect the validity of an execution.

§ 82. — Amendments

- a. In general
- b. Particular amendments
- c. Time of amendment
- d. Procedure to procure
- e. Effect of amendment

a. In General

Every court of record has the power to correct errors in executions and the exercise of this power rests largely in the discretion of the issuing court which will not allow an amendment when the writ is absolutely void.

The power to correct errors and mistakes in executions is unquestionable and belongs to every court of record.³ The court which issued the execution is the proper one to make any amendment.⁴ Except in so far as authorized by statute,⁵ the clerk of court has no authority to amend the writ after its delivery to the officer, without an order of court.⁶ Further, the officer has no authority to amend the execution without an order of court.⁷

When the writ is absolutely void, and not merely voidable, an amendment will not be allowed.⁸ However, a writ which is only voidable for clerical errors or omissions or for mistakes of form may be amended,⁹ and a writ which is amendable is only

voidable.¹⁰ An amendment will not be allowed where the effect of granting it will be to vary the execution from the judgment.¹¹

It has been stated that if the writ is amendable it will be accorded the same effect with reference to acts done in execution of it as if it had been amended.¹² An amendment to an execution withdrawn from the office where it was lodged without complying with the statute governing such withdrawals has been held to be inadmissible in evidence.¹³

Discretion of court. The allowance of an amendment rests in the discretion of the court, and from the very nature of things the rule by which the court is guided, in exercising its discretion to amend, is of a general and somewhat indefinite character, and there can be no rule other than that the amendment must be allowed or not in furtherance of justice.¹⁴ When it is in the furtherance of justice, the power to amend should be exercised with a liberal hand.¹⁵ This power, however, may not be exercised arbitrarily, but only where sufficient legal reason is shown for the court's interference.¹⁶

Rights of third persons. It is not allowable to amend the writ in a matter of substance when the amendment will affect prejudicially the rights of innocent third persons.¹⁷ At least the court will scan well the grounds on which its action is sought.¹⁸ However, it has been held that the sureties on a bond given to obtain a stay of proceedings under an execution cannot object to the exercise of the court's power of amendment.¹⁹

The most common instance in which an amendment is allowed is where the execution does not conform to the judgment, yet amendments may be allowed in other cases, although a writ directed to the sheriff of one county and delivered to the sheriff of another is not amendable.

The most common instance in which an amendment is allowed is where the execution does not conform to the judgment,²¹ as where there is a variance in the amount,²² a misrecital of date of rendition of judgment,²³ or a mistake in, or omission of, the names of either the creditor²⁴ or the debtor.²⁵ An amendment is allowable in cases of variance as to the amount or rate of interest,²⁶ non-conformity to præcipe,²⁷ mistake in, or omission of, the direction to the officer,²⁸ omission to command to levy and to make amount,²⁹ mistake or omission in the directions given to the officer with respect to the property to be taken³⁰ or as to making his return,³¹ error as to the name in which the writ runs,³² error in describing the obligation affording

the basis of the judgment,³³ omission of indorsements required by statute,³⁴ and in cases of erroneous teste,³⁵ as well as in cases of the omission of the clerk's signature,³⁶ except in jurisdictions where such omission is held to render the writ void.³⁷ Failure to indorse the time of receiving the writ may be cured by amendment after a return unsatisfied.³⁸

Where the writ is directed to the sheriff of one county and is delivered to the sheriff of another county, it is not amendable.³⁹

Absence of seal. An execution issued without attaching the clerk's official seal may be amended,⁴⁰ even though a motion to quash is pending,⁴¹ unless the lack of a seal is considered fatal to the validity of the writ.⁴²

c. Time of Amendment

An amendment to a writ should be seasonably made and it is generally recognized that an amendment may be allowed in matters of form even after a sale.

Although it has been stated that no amendment can be made after a sale,⁴⁹ it is generally recognized that an amendment may be allowed in all matters of form, in the discretion of the court, as well after a sale has been made under the writ as before the sale.⁵⁰

An amendment to the writ may be obtained by motion or by some other form of application to the court by a proper person or an amendment may be made by the court of its own motion.

An amendment to a writ of execution may be obtained by motion or by some other form of application to the court⁵¹ by a proper person,⁵² or an amendment may be made by the court of its own motion.⁵³ Mere formal irregularities may be amended by order of the court on a motion to set aside the writ.⁵⁴

The party asking for the amendment of a writ of execution must pay the costs of an action for trespass for the levy under the defective execution, where such an action has been brought.⁵⁵

Notice. It is not permissible to allow an amendment to the writ, in a matter of substance, which will affect prejudicially defendant and third persons, without giving them notice.⁵⁶ In matters of form, however, the writ may be amended even after a sale has been made under it, without a rule on, or notice to, defendant.⁵⁷

e. Effect of Amendment

An amendment nunc pro tunc of a writ of execution makes it effective as between the parties, as if the defect had never existed.

An amendment nunc pro tunc of a writ of execution makes it effective as between the parties, as if the defect had never existed.⁵⁸ Where made after levy it relates back to the date of the writ.⁵⁹ It has been held that an amendment, by striking out the name of a person not a party to the judgment, does not affect the lien of the execution,⁶⁰ and that the title of the officer seizing the goods remains unimpaired, even though the amendment destroys the writ.⁶¹ An amendment allowed by the court without objection has been held to cure a defect in the name of the debtor.⁶²

The execution is not invalidated by a change which is irregular.⁶³

Execution returned unsatisfied

Validity of execution, which was issued and returned unsatisfied, may not be collaterally attacked by defendants.—Feigenbaum v. Narragansett Stables Co., 215 N.Y.S. 328, 127 Misc. 114, affirmed 219 N.Y.S. 811, 219 App.Div. 729, affirmed 157 N.E. 886, 245 N.Y. 628.

so irregular that it could be set aside on motion.⁶⁵ It is only where the proceedings are so defective that they are absolutely void that defects in them can be relied on in a collateral proceeding,⁶⁶ although it is impossible to lay down any general rule as to when an execution is so irregular as to be void.⁶⁷ If the execution is not merely irregular and voidable, but absolutely void, it may be attacked collaterally⁶⁸ by any person whose interests are affected by it.⁶⁹ Ordinarily mere irregularities can be taken advantage of in a direct proceeding only by defendant or his representative,⁷⁰ and subsequent execution creditors cannot take advantage of such defects,⁷¹ although the contrary has been held where the objection was that the amount of the execution was too large.⁷²

The rules just stated have been applied to executions issued on transcript from a justice of the peace,⁷³ to executions issued to other counties,⁷⁴ as well as to alias executions.⁷⁵

§ 84. — Defects, Objections, and Waiver

The debtor may waive an irregularity in the execution.

The debtor may waive an irregularity in the execution either by some positive act,⁷⁶ by acquiescence,⁷⁷ or by laches.⁷⁸ Any error in issuing an execution while a previous one remains outstanding and unreturned cannot be complained of when only one levy and one satisfaction are being attempted.⁷⁹

It is said that waiver by defendant will be inferred from very slight evidence.⁸⁰ However, filing a motion to stay proceedings under an execution does not estop the debtor, on subsequently discovering that the writ was not sealed, from raising such objection.⁸¹

- b. Right to alias or pluries writ
- c. Time of issuance
- d. Procedure to procure
- e. Form and contents
- f. Renewals instead of alias writs
- g. Reestablishment of lost or destroyed writ

a. In General

The writ which follows the original is called an "alias" writ and writs following the alias are called "pluries" writs; as a general rule the mere issuance of an alias before the return of the original is insufficient to establish an abandonment of the execution and levy thereunder.

The writ which follows the original writ of execution is called an "alias" writ; writs which follow the alias are called "pluries" fieri facias.⁸² Calling a writ an "alias" does not make it an alias writ.⁸³

Effect of issuance. Although there are authorities to the contrary,⁸⁴ as a general rule the mere issuance of an alias writ before the return of the original is not of itself sufficient to establish an abandonment of the execution and levy thereunder,⁸⁵ especially where the second execution is void,⁸⁶ although such issuance of an alias is competent evidence on the question of abandonment.⁸⁷ An alias, although improperly issued, may be a legal justification to the officer to whom it is directed.⁸⁸

The issuing of an alias while the levy under the first writ is undisposed of cannot affect the lien of the judgment.⁸⁹ An alias continues the lien of the original execution so as to preclude the satisfaction of another execution issued between the two.⁹⁰ The issuing of an alias does not preclude the judgment debtor from showing, on an issue of illegality, that the judgment had been paid before the alias was issued.⁹¹

b. Right to Alias or Pluries Writ

- (1) In general
- (2) Before return of prior writ
- (3) Where there is outstanding levy
- (4) After judgment satisfied or return of execution satisfied

(1) In General

The right to issue alias and pluries executions exists independently of any statute; such writs are proper where an execution is unproductive.

The right to issue alias and pluries executions exists independently of any statute conferring authority to issue them; and statutes authorizing the issuance of alias and pluries writs under certain circumstances do not, by implication, interfere with or change the rule, as established by the practice of the courts, allowing the issuance of such writs under other proper circumstances;⁹² nor do statutes authorizing the renewal of executions interfere with the right to issue alias and pluries writs, where the circumstances exist under which, at common law, an alias might be issued, unless such statutes expressly or by fair intendment assume to take away the right.⁹³

An alias or pluries writ is proper where an execution is unproductive,⁹⁴ as where the first or preceding writ is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part,⁹⁵ or where, as appears infra subdivision b (4) of this section, a former writ has been returned satisfied when in fact no satisfaction has been made. In other words, if satisfaction is not obtained by the original, the party interested has the right to an alias and a pluries until satisfaction is obtained.⁹⁶ Where an execution is quashed, an alias execution may issue,⁹⁷ and pending a rule to set aside a writ returned by order of court an alias or pluries writ may issue.⁹⁸ An alias execution may issue, although the judgment does not provide for its issuance,⁹⁹ and although the record of the judgment has been lost.¹ Neither the forfeiture of a claim bond² nor the beginning of supplementary proceedings³ affects the right to an alias.

A creditor whose execution is enjoined for failure to credit a partial payment is not entitled to an alias writ, but his remedy is to have the injunction dissolved for the balance due.⁴ There can be no alias or pluries writ against property sold under valid proceedings under a prior execution.⁵

ment has no greater legal right to an alias execution than had the assignor.⁶

Special execution. The rule that plaintiff is entitled to a special execution only in cases expressly allowed by statute applies to alias special executions.⁷

Waiver. The right to an alias may be waived;⁸ but if the creditor has granted an indulgence to defendant on the original execution, there is no presumption that the indulgence is extended to an alias execution after its issue.⁹

(2) Before Return of Prior Writ

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, before an alias or pluries writ can be issued the writ previously issued, with an appropriate return indorsed thereon, must have been returned, although an irregularity in this respect has been held not to render the writ void.

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, before an alias or pluries writ can be issued, the writ previously issued, with an appropriate return indorsed thereon, must have been returned,¹⁰ the presumption of law being that the judgment was satisfied on the first execution, until the contrary appears by the return of the officer.¹¹ Nevertheless it has been held that, although it is irregular to issue an alias before return of the former execution, such irregularity does not render the alias writ void.¹² An improper return will not prevent the issuance of an alias.¹³

sence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed that they were preceded by others regularly issued,¹⁴ and that the alias was not issued until the return of the prior writ.¹⁵ However, it has been stated that no presumption exists that an original writ of execution was ever returned and filed, in the absence of the writ itself or any record thereof.¹⁶

(3) Where There Is Outstanding Levy

- (a) In general
- (b) On personal property

(a) In General

As a general rule, where an execution has been levied on property, an alias or pluries execution is not issuable while such levy is still in force; but according to some authorities a levy on real estate does not affect the right to alias or pluries writs.

As a general proposition, where an execution has been levied on property, an alias or pluries execution is not issuable while such levy is still in force and remains undisposed of, by sale of the property or otherwise.¹⁷ This rule has been considered necessary to prevent abuse and oppression.¹⁸ The proper writ to dispose of a levy is a venditioni exponas rather than an alias.¹⁹ Until the levy is disposed of by a sale of the property or a return of it to the debtor, a satisfaction of the judgment is presumed;²⁰ but this is only a presumption.²¹

On land. It is generally held that, notwithstanding a levy on real estate, plaintiff is entitled to issue alias and pluries writs,²² or that, at most, such issue is a mere irregularity.²³ However, the contrary view has been taken, and it has been held that, where an execution has been levied on land which does not appear to have been sold or released, no other execution can be regularly issued, and that a venditioni exponas is the only proper process until it is found that the whole of the money cannot be raised by selling the land,²⁴ and that, where a levy has been made on real estate, and it is afterward discovered that the title to a definite portion of the property has failed either through want of ownership or invalid proceedings, the creditor is entitled to a new execution only for the amount remaining unsatisfied.²⁵

(b) On Personal Property

An outstanding levy on personal property ordinarily suspends the right to issue an alias or pluries writ on the same judgment.

Inasmuch as the levy of an execution on sufficient personal property of the debtor to satisfy the judgment is prima facie, and as long as the levy continues in force, a satisfaction of the judgment, as between the parties thereto, see the C.J.S. title Judgments § 573, also 34 C.J. p 717 note 48 et seq, the right to issue an alias or pluries writ is suspended, because goods on which the levy has been made are in custodia legis, and if the same remain unsold the proper course is to have a venditioni exponas issued requiring the goods to be sold.²⁶

On the other hand, if the execution fails in whole or in part, without any fault of plaintiff, he may have an alias or pluries execution.²⁷ It may be laid down as a general rule, that where the levy has been unavailing, and especially where the debtor has sustained no loss thereby, plaintiff may sue out an alias or pluries writ.²⁸ The levy is unavailing, and another execution may be issued where the levy is insufficient to satisfy the judgment,²⁹ or is on property not belonging to the debtor,³⁰ or on property not subject to execution;³¹ where defendant, after the levy, disclaims title, and plaintiff refrains from further proceedings;³² where the levy has been set aside or superseded;³³ where the execution has been discharged by a mistaken or void levy;³⁴ where the proceeds of the property taken are applied to the payment of older executions;³⁵ or where plaintiff has been enjoined from selling the property.³⁶ However, it must clearly appear that the property levied on is not sufficient to pay the judgment,³⁷ since prima facie a valid levy is sufficient.³⁸

Where replevin or forthcoming bond given or forfeited. If execution is levied on the property of the debtor, it is held, although not universally,³⁹ that a replevin bond⁴⁰ or a forthcoming bond⁴¹ given by the debtor operates for the time being as a satisfaction of the original judgment, and as long as the bond is in force a second execution cannot issue.

Where the original writ is levied on a chattel, and a forthcoming bond is given and subsequently forfeited, plaintiff, according to some authorities, is entitled to issue an alias;⁴² but in some cases it has been maintained that the forfeiture of the bond is a full satisfaction of the judgment, and that no other execution can be issued.⁴³

Property in debtor's possession

Where a levy is made on chattels and they are retained by the debtor or he regains possession of them and they are eventually lost to plaintiff, the levy does not operate as a satisfaction and does not prevent the issuance of an alias.—Binford v. Alston, 15 N.C. 351—23 C.J. p 394 note 23.

Neglect or misconduct of officer

Where property has been left in the debtor's possession and has been lost to plaintiff, through the neglect or misconduct of the sheriff or other officer, and the loss has not been occasioned by the fraud or acquiescence of the creditor, the fact that the officer and his sureties are liable to the creditor does not affect the right of the creditor to sue out an alias execution, as the remedies against the debtor and the officer are cumulative.—Cooley v. Abandonment of levy. As a general rule plaintiff cannot abandon a levy which is regular and issue an alias execution,⁴⁴ although he may abandon or withdraw the writ before it has been levied, and thereupon sue out an alias.⁴⁵ However, where the levy, or the execution under which it was made, is irregular, plaintiff may abandon the levy and sue out an alias.⁴⁶ Another execution may be issued where the property is released and restored to defendant under an agreement between plaintiff and defendant, or where defendant acquiesces in the abandonment of the levy.⁴⁷

Void or voidable. An alias or pluries writ issued while a levy made under a prior writ remains undisposed of is not absolutely void, but voidable only, and cannot be attacked collaterally.⁴⁸

(4) After Judgment Satisfied or Return of Execution Satisfied

After the judgment has been satisfied an alias or pluries writ cannot be issued, and such writ may not issue after execution has been returned satisfied without first proceeding to set aside such satisfaction.

After the judgment has been paid or satisfied, the issuance of an alias or pluries execution is unauthorized;⁴⁹ and where an execution has been returned satisfied, an alias or pluries cannot be issued without first proceeding to have such satisfaction set aside by the court.⁵⁰

Where a return of satisfaction has been made, it must be such as the sheriff is authorized to make or it will not prevent the issuance of an alias.⁵¹ Where an execution is discharged⁵² or satisfied⁵³ by mistake or accident, the creditor is entitled to an alias. Where an execution has been returned satisfied after a sale of the property of a third person, the return may be set aside and an alias may issue.⁵⁴ However, where an execution is returned satisfied, another execution cannot be issued for the costs incurred therein unless there is an order for the collection of such costs.⁵⁵

If by mistake the writ is for an amount less than that to which the creditor is entitled under his judgment, an alias may issue for the balance,⁵⁶ but an alias may not issue where the writ is for the proper sum but the creditor directs a levy for a less sum,⁵⁷ or where the writ fails to specify that interest is to be collected on the judgment.⁵⁸

c. Time of Issuance

An alias may issue before the return day of the original or on the same day on which the original is returned; as a general rule, if the original execution was issued within the time limited, subsequent writs may issue at any time thereafter provided the judgment remains in force.

An alias may issue before the return day of the original if the original has been returned before the return day,⁵⁹ or at least such an execution is not void as distinguished from voidable.⁶⁰ An alias may be issued on the same day on which the original is returned.⁶¹

Time within which writ must issue. At common law if the original writ of fieri facias was issued within a year and a day of the rendition of the judgment and thence continued regularly on the records of the court, a new writ of execution might be taken out at any time without reviving the judgment by scire facias.⁶² The practice of entering the continuances on the judgment roll was merely formal, since they might be entered after the writs were issued⁶³ and after objection had been made,⁶⁴ and it fell into disuse.⁶⁵ If the original was sued out within a year after the rendition of the judgment and returned nulla bona, it was immaterial that more than a year and a day elapsed between the return of the original and the issuance of the alias, and no scire facias was necessary.⁶⁶ The usual expression of the courts is that, if an execution is issued within the year and a day, plaintiff "may at any time thereafter take out a writ," but this language does not mean anything more than that subsequent writs may be issued while the judgment is in force and of undisputed validity, and is not intended to imply that an execution may be issued after the period of limitation.⁶⁷

In some jurisdictions an analogous rule prevails under modern regulations as to practice and if the original is sued out within the time limited by statute the limitation of the statute does not apply to the alias which may issue as of course.⁶⁸ However, it has been held that the statutory limitation applies to the alias and pluries writs as well as to the originals.⁶⁹ The time within which a writ may issue after the date of issuance of the last preceding writ may be specially limited.⁷⁰

Computation of time. The time for renewing an execution so as to render a scire facias unnecessary begins to run from the last day the execution has to run in court before its final return.⁷¹ Any delay caused by an injunction out of chancery cannot be taken into account.⁷² Statutes sometimes provide that certain periods of time shall not be included as part of the period of limitations.⁷³ Where an execution was issued and then discovered to be void, and an order for a new execution was obtained, but no new execution was issued until five years after rendition of judgment, the order did not extend the time within which the execution could issue.⁷⁴

A void writ cannot be relied on as interrupting the running of time within which the writ may be issued and as sufficient to support the issuance of an alias or pluries;⁷⁵ but an execution which is not void, but which is voidable only, because of informality therein, is sufficient to prevent the judgment from becoming dormant.⁷⁶

d. Procedure to Procure

- (1) In general
- (2) After death of party

(1) In General

In the ordinary case, in the absence of statute, where an execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied, an alias may be issued without a scire facias or motion asking leave of court and ordinarily it is not necessary to give notice to the defendant or to renew the demand.

While an alias writ cannot be issued without an order of the court when the original writ has not been returned,⁷⁷ in the ordinary case, in the absence of a statute or rule of court otherwise providing, where an execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied, an alias may be issued without a scire facias or a motion asking leave of court.⁷⁸ If the first writ is returned not executed, a new order of seizure and sale is not necessary to the validity of an alias.⁷⁹ Where plaintiff in execution has been compelled to refund the value of a portion of the property levied on under the original execution, no order or leave of court is necessary for the issuance of a second execution for the amount so refunded.⁸⁰ In the absence of collusion between plaintiff and defendant, an execution may be renewed by the written consent of the judgment debtor indorsed on it.⁸¹

Where the writ has been levied on the property of a stranger, and satisfaction has been entered, the remedy is by scire facias or a motion addressed to the court to set aside the satisfaction and procure a new writ.⁸² After satisfaction by a sale no further levy can be made until the court has set aside the sale, vacated the satisfaction, and ordered a new execution.⁸³ Where execution has been returned "satisfied," the clerk cannot on the ground of mistake issue a new execution without leave of court.⁸⁴

Where by statute the party or his attorney of record has the right to issue execution, an alias issued by the clerk without authority from the execution plaintiff is an irregularity but does not render the writ so issued void.⁸⁵ In equity under a rule of court which provides that, if the decree is solely for the payment of money, final process to execute the decree may be by a writ of execution in the form used in suits at common law, an alias cannot be issued except by order of the court which rendered the decree,⁸⁶ and an alias writ issued by the clerk without an order of the court is void.⁸⁷ The maxim, He who seeks equity must do equity, may be applied to a creditor asking for an alias.⁸⁸

Form of proceeding. The most common proceeding to obtain an alias, especially by the old practice, is scire facias.⁸⁹ Plaintiff may also obtain relief by motion in some jurisdictions;⁹⁰ and sometimes an action of debt on the judgment is held a concurrent remedy with scire facias.⁹¹

Notice and demand. Ordinarily it is not necessary to give notice to defendant⁹² or to renew the demand⁹³ before issuing an alias execution. It has been held, however, that a motion for a new execution after the former execution has been returned satisfied by levy on land, the levy having been defective, will not be granted except on notice to defendant,⁹⁴ and that the rule is the same where a motion is made for reestablishing or obtaining a new writ which has been destroyed or lost.⁹⁵

Pleading and proof. Plaintiff must aver and prove the ground relied on for the issuance of a new execution.⁹⁶ Where a new execution is asked for on the ground that the property seized under the former writ was encumbered by a prior lien, the declaration must show that the property was taken from the execution defendant by virtue of such lien.⁹⁷

Defenses. On a scire facias to obtain a new execution on the ground of the invalidity of the original, no facts can be properly relied on in defense which existed prior to the judgment.⁹⁸

(2) After Death of Party

In some jurisdictions an alias execution cannot issue after defendant's death without a revival of the judgment unless a lien has been acquired by former execution issued in defendant's lifetime and continued since, and a similar rule obtains in case of plaintiff's death.

While it has been held that the issuance of an alias or pluries writ will not be affected by the death of defendant after the original is in the hands of the sheriff,⁹⁹ unless he has returned the process without a sale,¹ in some jurisdictions it is held that

After discharge of body execution

Under a statute so providing where a creditor discharges the body of a debtor committed on execution, he is entitled, as matter of right and without notice to the debtor, to an alias execution against his property. —Martin v. Kilbourne, 11 Vt. 93.

Where application made within certain time an alias execution cannot issue after the death of defendant without a revival of the judgment unless a lien has been acquired by former execution issued in the lifetime of defendant and properly continued since;² but if the continuance has not been properly maintained the lien is lost and then scire facias is necessary to revive the judgment before any subsequent execution can issue.³ However, where an alias execution performs the office of a venditioni exponas at common law, it is valid without a scire facias.⁴

Death of plaintiff. If plaintiff dies after an execution is issued and returned wholly or partly unsatisfied, a revival of the judgment is necessary before an alias writ can issue,⁵ at least where no lien has been acquired by the first execution.⁶ The same rule applies where plaintiff dies before the return of the first execution.⁷

The same formalities must be observed in the preparation of an alias or pluries execution as though it were an original; in addition, an alias or pluries writ should show that others have preceded it and should state the number of previous writs and the amount remaining unsatisfied.

The alias should consist of a new writ, and it is not proper to send forth the previous writ with alterations or indorsements thereon.⁸ The same formalities must be observed in the preparation of an alias or pluries execution as though it were an original; it must conform to the judgment, must be signed and sealed, and must contain a proper direction and mandate.⁹ Under the old practice an alias was properly tested as of the term to which the original was returnable,¹⁰ or as of the day on which the original was returnable,¹¹ and the pluries as of the term to which or the day on which the alias was returnable and so on.¹² An alias fieri facias cannot be regularly issued for the same term to which the original is issued.¹³

Recitals as to previous execution. An execution which is not an original should show on its face that others have preceded it,¹⁴ should purport to be an alias or pluries writ, as the case may be,¹⁵ and in some jurisdictions should state the number of executions which have preceded it.¹⁶

At common law, and under some statutes, an execution not an original should recite the proceedings under a former fieri facias.¹⁷ However, the fact that the writ does not recite the proceedings under a former fieri facias as required at common law,¹⁸ or that it does not show the number of executions which have preceded it,¹⁹ does not render the writ void; and it should not be quashed merely because not entitled as an alias execution.²⁰

Formal errors in prior executions do not invalidate a later execution correctly issued.²¹

Recital of amount. Where an execution has been satisfied in part, an alias must state the proper amount of the judgment remaining unsatisfied and command the officer to collect such unsatisfied part in the usual form.²² A renewal execution should issue for the balance due on the original with interest from the date of the last credit on the principal debt,²³ unless it is otherwise provided by statute.²⁴ As in the case of original executions, the issuance of an alias for too great an amount does not render the writ void.²⁵

The mandate. In an alias execution the mandate is, "You are commanded as you have been before;" while the mandate of a pluries writ is, "You are commanded as you have been often before."²⁶

Indorsements. Plaintiff is not bound to make an indorsement required by statute on an alias after the return nulla bona on the original which was properly indorsed.²⁷

f. Renewals Instead of Alias Writs

Unless it is authorized by immemorial practice or by statute, the renewal of an execution, after it has been returned, by an indorsement thereon is not proper, although a writ thus irregularly reissued is not void.

A renewed execution is not a different one from the original but derives its efficacy, not from the mere change of its date, but from the original signature of the clerk.²⁸ Unless it is authorized by immemorial practice²⁹ or by statute,³⁰ the renewal of an execution, after it has been returned, by an indorsement thereon is not proper. Although it is irregular to adopt this course, an execution reissued with a new date, as an alias execution, is not void, but voidable only.³¹ The court may permit a sheriff to withdraw from the files a returned writ of execution for his use in making a sale of property.³²

Under some statutes the reissuance of an execution with a renewal thereof indorsed thereon is authorized.³³ There must be a substantial compliance with the terms of these statutes;³⁴ and when it is so required the indorsement of the renewal must be dated³⁵ and signed.³⁶ Authority to renew an execution does not make it permissible to issue a different kind of execution.³⁷

g. Reestablishment of Lost or Destroyed Writ

If an execution has been lost or destroyed and the fact is properly shown, the plaintiff may reestablish his writ in lieu of the original.

If an execution has been lost or destroyed and the fact is properly shown, plaintiff may reestablish his writ in lieu of the original,³⁸ and the writ thus reestablished is not an alias.³⁹ The new copy is made out nunc pro tunc.⁴⁰ Under some statutes or practice, however, where an execution is lost or destroyed, an order for an "alias" execution is the proper procedure.⁴¹

A duplicate execution issued after loss of the original while in the hands of the officer, although issued without an order of court, is voidable and not void.⁴²

§ 86. Presumption as to Validity

It may be presumed that an execution has been regularly issued.

§ 87. Effect of Invalidity

A void execution is a nullity.

A writ of execution which is void is a nullity.⁴⁴

The effect of a void execution on particular rights and liabilities is discussed in connection with such rights and liabilities in appropriate sections in this title and in other titles of this work devoted thereto.

IV. LEVY OF WRIT, AND CUSTODY OF PROPERTY

§ 88. Definitions and Nature

The levy of an execution consists in the acts by which an officer sets apart or appropriates, for the purpose of satisfying the command of the writ, a part or the whole of a judgment debtor's property.

The levy of an execution has been defined to be the acts by which an officer sets apart or appropriates, for the purpose of satisfying the command of the writ, a part or the whole of a judgment debtor's property.⁴⁵ Its object is to take property into the custody of the law, and thereby render it liable to the lien of the execution, and put it out of the power of the judgment debtor to divert it to any other use or purpose.⁴⁶

The service of an execution is distinguishable from the levy thereof in strictly legal parlance, and is the communication of its contents to the execution defendant, accompanied by, or followed with, a demand for its satisfaction, and in its natural order precedes the levy of the writ;⁴⁷ but it has been held the putting an execution into the hands of an officer for "service" means "to be executed" by levy and sale.⁴⁸

The difference between levying and garnishing is that in a levy the officer takes actual or constructive possession of the property, whereas in garnish-

ment the property is left in the garnishee's possession.⁴⁹

§ 89. Matters Precluding Levy

An execution cannot be levied on the debtor's property after the judgment has been satisfied or after an execution against the person has been perfected.

After the judgment has been paid or otherwise satisfied, an execution, although it was issued before the payment of the judgment, cannot be levied, since the writ is functus officio;⁵⁰ and after a debtor has been taken and been discharged by the consent of the creditor,⁵¹ or been committed to prison under a capias ad satisfaciendum,⁵² no levy can be made on the debtor's personal or real estate.

§ 90. Control of Writ and Directions to Officer and as a general rule, subject to qualifications which will appear, it is within his exclusive control.⁵³ After the judgment has been assigned, however, the assignee has the right to control the execution;⁵⁴ but it has been held that the assignee must inform the officer of his interest in the judgment, even though the assignment appears of record.⁵⁵ An assignor of a judgment has no control of an execution taken out by his assignee,⁵⁶ and a person not a party to the record can exercise no control over the execution.⁵⁷ So plaintiff's control over the writ cannot be interfered with by officers who are interested in the collection of their fees,⁵⁸ the rule being that an officer has no right to exercise control over an execution simply because his fees are included therein;⁵⁹ but the officers interested in a fee bill, delivered as an execution against defendant, and not the judgment creditor, have a right to control it.⁶⁰

Withdrawal of writ. The rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that, where the judgment creditor has placed an execution in the hands of the sheriff, he may withdraw it before it is so acted on that its withdrawal would be injurious to third parties,⁶¹ and the direction to the sheriff not to act on the writ is equivalent to its withdrawal;⁶² but the writ cannot be withdrawn after it has been executed.⁶³

Control by court. It is within the power of the court to control an execution so as to prevent an injustice.⁶⁴

b. Directions to Officer

An officer receiving a writ of execution under instructions from the court or the creditor as to the manner of executing it is bound to follow such instructions if they are proper.

The judgment creditor is not bound to instruct the officer as to his legal rights under the execution and levy,⁶⁵ but he has a right to give directions to the officer as to the time and manner of executing the writ when he delivers the process to him, and the officer receiving it under such instructions is bound to follow them if they are reasonable and not in conflict with the law,⁶⁶ but the officer need not obey instructions which are improper.⁶⁷

Directions given by the court to the officer as to the levying of the execution should be followed.⁶⁸

§ 91. Necessity for Levy

Generally, in the absence of waiver, a levy is an indispensable step toward the consummation of an execution sale, although in some jurisdictions a formal levy on realty subject to the lien of the judgment is unnecessary.

According to the great weight of authority, to enable the sheriff to sell the property and vest in the purchaser at the sale a valid title, a levy on the property so sold is indispensable,⁶⁹ and this is generally true whether the property is personal⁷⁰ or real.⁷¹ In some jurisdictions, however, a formal levy of an execution on real estate under a judgment which constitutes a lien on the land, is unnecessary, and the failure of the sheriff to levy an execution on the land before selling it will not vitiate the title of a purchaser.⁷²

The mere issuance of an execution does not give the officer to whom it is directed the right of possession of any property until he has levied the writ thereon.⁷³

A tender of payment will obviate the necessity for a levy.⁷⁴

Presumption. The presumption is that an officer who sells property on execution has previously made a valid levy thereof.⁷⁵

Waiver. A judgment debtor may waive a levy on his property, and where there is such a waiver, the sale passes title as effectually as if a valid levy had been actually made.⁷⁶

Effect of levy by another

(1) The levy of a writ by an officer to whom it was not directed has been held void.

A levy of execution must be made by an officer duly qualified to act under the writ,⁷⁷ and cannot be made by a private person.⁷⁸ Generally the levy must be made by the officer to whom the execution is directed, and by no other,⁷⁹ and this rule applies to an alias execution;⁸⁰ but the clerical work of writing out the levy or making an inventory may be performed by any person the sheriff sees proper to employ.⁸¹ Where the statute prescribes the particular officer or class of officers who must execute the writ, the levy must be by the officer or one of the class of officers thus designated by statute to whom the writ is directed.⁸² However, a duly appointed officer who has not given the bond required by law is a de facto officer and may make a levy,⁸³ and, of course, if no bond is required by statute the officer may levy, although he has given no bond.⁸⁴ A levy by an officer who has no authority is void.⁸⁵

Effect of interest. At common law and under statutes declaratory of the common law, an officer cannot personally, or by his deputy, levy an execution in which he is personally interested,⁸⁶ as where he is a party to the action⁸⁷ or is entitled to the proceeds of the sale under the execution;⁸⁸ but this rule does not apply where his interest is only such as arises out of his right to a fee or commission.⁸⁹

Territorial limitations. The general rule is that an officer has no authority to levy on and sell property situated beyond the bounds of his county or district,⁹⁰ except where it is otherwise provided by statute;⁹¹ but where a tract of land is divided by a county line the officer is sometimes authorized by statute to act in part outside his county,⁹² although, independent of statute, the sale is held valid only as to the part within his county.⁹³

After expiration of term of office. As appears in the C.J.S. title Sheriffs and Constables § 50, also 57 C.J. p 790 note 11 et seq, under the common law and statutes declaratory thereof all officers and their deputies may execute all precepts remaining in their hands at the time of the expiration of their terms of office, and hence an officer having an execution in his hands and commencing its service before the termination of his office may proceed afterward to complete such service;⁹⁴ but it must appear that while in office he acted on the writ to an extent amounting in law and fact to an incipient step in the execution, and duly followed up such step after leaving the office.⁹⁵

§ 93. Time of Levy

A levy, to be valid, must be timely made on or before the return day.

A levy of execution must not be prematurely made.⁹⁶ Accordingly it must not be made until the officer has received the writ and had directions, express or implied, to make the levy.⁹⁷ It must precede the sale,⁹⁸ and must be made within the time fixed by statute.⁹⁹ The officer may levy the execution as soon as he receives it,¹ but generally, so far as concerns the power derived by the officer from the writ, he has the entire time within which the writ is returnable to make the levy.² The creditor, however, has a right to insist that the officer shall proceed within a reasonable time to seize the property of the debtor, even in the absence of specific instructions to the officer, if the latter knows or by reasonable effort can ascertain that the debtor has property liable to seizure,³ and special instructions from the creditor, accompanied by information of facts constituting a necessity for an immediate levy, must be complied with when practicable.⁴

On or after return day. The general rule is well settled that an officer has no authority to make a levy of a fieri facias after the return day thereof,⁵ even though plaintiff gives an indemnity bond,⁶ but the levy may be made on the return day,⁷ or at least, as has been said, at any time on the return day, so long as the court to which it is returnable continues in session that day.⁸ A levy made after the return day is not irregular merely but is absolutely null and void.⁹

Additional levies. The fact that a levy has been made before the return day does not authorize the sheriff to make after the return day any additional levies that may be necessary.¹⁰

After the return of the writ. The officer is not authorized to make a levy after he has returned the writ, since the writ, on being returned, although before the return day, becomes functus officio.¹¹

Presumptions. Where an officer has sold property under a writ of execution, the law presumes, his return being silent upon the subject, that he did his duty by levying the execution while it was still in full force.¹²

§ 94. Mode and Sufficiency of Levy

When the method of making a levy is prescribed by statute such method must be followed; unequivocal acts by the officer sufficient to constitute a levy are essential.

When the method of making a levy is prescribed by statute, in whole or in part, it is the duty of the officer to proceed strictly according to the statute,¹³ and if he does not do so the levy, see § 109 infra, or sale, see § 231 infra, may be set aside. He must perform unequivocal acts sufficient to constitute a levy¹⁴ and must act with the intention of making a levy.¹⁵

The issuance of an execution without any direction as to how it is to be enforced or as to what property is to be taken implies only an authority to do a lawful act in pursuance to its command;¹⁶ but where the writ gives directions the officer should follow them,¹⁷ and in doing so should do as little mischief to the debtor as possible.¹⁸

Against joint debtors. Where judgment is taken and execution issued jointly against two defendants, it is immaterial so far as they are concerned whether the sheriff first levies on joint property or not;¹⁹ but under a statute authorizing a capias ad satisfaciendum he cannot take the property of one joint debtor and the body of the other.²⁰ This matter may be regulated by an agreement of all the parties.²¹

on property to satisfy several executions,²² particularly where plaintiffs and defendants are the same in each.²³

Question of fact. Whether there has been a legal levy is generally a question of fact.²⁴

§ 95. — Notice or Demand and Selection of Property

- a. Notice or demand before levy
- b. Selection of property

a. Notice or Demand before Levy

Where the statute so requires, an officer, before making a levy, should notify the judgment debtor of the issuance of the writ of execution, or make demand on him for payment of the judgment.

Although an officer, in the absence of statute to the contrary, need not notify the judgment debtor of the issuance of the writ, or make any formal demand on him for payment, before making the levy,²⁵ it has been said that a good officer, when it is practicable, will always inform the debtor of an execution which he may have against him, if he believes that the debtor is not aware of it, and confer with the debtor before making a levy;²⁶ and in many jurisdictions by force of statute the officer is required, whenever it is practicable to do so, to give notice to the debtor of the issuance of the writ or make formal demand on him for payment of the judgment before proceeding with the levy.²⁷ The object of such notice is to give the debtor an opportunity to pay the execution without incurring further costs or to designate the property to be levied on.²⁸

Sufficiency. Under statutes requiring a formal demand on the judgment debtor for payment before the levy of the execution, it has been held that this demand must be made on the debtor personally, or at his usual place of abode.²⁹

Effect of omission. The omission of such demand and notice before levy, where required, is a mere irregularity and will not render the levy invalid or void, and no relief will be granted to the judgment debtor where he does not appear to have been in any way prejudiced by the omission of the officer.³⁰

b. Selection of Property

- (1) By debtor
- (2) By creditor
- (3) By court
- (4) Where there are several defendants
- (5) Encumbered and aliened property

(1) By Debtor

Where the statute so provides, a judgment debtor may select and point out property on which he desires the levy to be made.

At the common law the debtor has no election as to which of his distrainable property shall be first taken;³¹ but in most of the states, by force of statute, the judgment debtor is now entitled to the right to select and point out to the officer property upon which he desires the levy to be made,³² or

22. Separate levies not required

Where a sheriff has several executions in his hands for levy and there is nothing in the record to show that any one execution has priority over the others, there is no statutory requirement that there shall be a separate levy under each execution.—Kenley v. Possession of chattels

(1) Under Sayles Civ.St. art. 2287, the party exercising the privilege of pointing out property must, if required, put the officer in possession of chattels designated by him by such act of giving possession as the nature of the case will reasonably admit of.—Ross v. Lister, 14 Tex. 469.

(2) The possession given the officer must be such as to place the property under his control, and to enable him to make delivery to the purchaser.—Texas-Mexican R. Co. v. Wright, 31 S.W. 613, 88 Tex. 346, 31 L.R.A. 200.

(3) A request by a judgment debtor to the officer to levy on horses in a lot in town, in the absence of more specific designation, does not make it the officer's duty to levy thereon before levying on real estate under the statute requiring that levy shall first be made on property designated by defendant, provided, if it be personal property, defendant deliver it into the officer's possession.—Anderson v. Oldham, 18 S.W. 557, 82 Tex. 228.

Execution creditor as mortgagee

Under Code § 648, providing that the debtor shall not have the right of pointing out to the sheriff the property he wishes seized on execu-

to select the property which he desires to claim as exempt under the statute.³³ The judgment creditor may disregard the debtor's selection, if there is a good reason for doing so, as where the property selected is already encumbered.³⁴ The officer is not bound to seek the debtor and demand from him such designation,³⁵ and a failure to give the debtor an opportunity to point out property is a mere irregularity³⁶ which is harmless where it does not appear that he had any other property than that levied on.³⁷

Sufficiency of designation. The debtor should give the officer sufficient information to enable him to make the levy, and should furnish a description of the property on which he desires to have the levy made;³⁸ and when the debtor points out real estate every reasonable evidence of title should be exhibited, and the sheriff will not be compelled to take loose memoranda which the debtor may offer.³⁹ The debtor has no right to designate any other property than his own.⁴⁰

Change of election. The debtor, after once exercising his option of selecting property, is estopped from insisting that other property should be taken.⁴¹

Waiver or neglect or refusal to exercise right. The judgment debtor, under a statute giving him the right of designating the property to be levied on, cannot defeat a levy by neglect or refusal to exercise his statutory right.⁴² This right of the judgment debtor is personal to himself and may be waived.⁴³

Failure to make the levy as designated does not necessarily render the levy⁴⁴ or subsequent sale thereunder⁴⁵ invalid, although in a proper case it may be sufficient ground for setting the levy aside.⁴⁶

(2) By Creditor

In some instances the creditor may select or point out the property he desires to be levied on.

Under some statutes the judgment creditor has, to a limited extent, a right to select the property he desires to be levied on;⁴⁷ but ordinarily he need not go with the officer to defendant or point out the property to be levied on,⁴⁸ although under some circumstances the officer may⁴⁹ and should⁵⁰ re-tion if the execution creditor has a mortgage on part of the debtor's property, where the creditor had a mortgage on the property seized, no objection could be based on the refusal to allow the debtor to point out the property he wished seized.—Lambeth v. Sentell, 38 La. Ann. 691.

Claimant's selection superior

A statute providing that sheriff should first levy on and sell that part of property which defendant in fieri facias desires sold is not applicable where a claimant points out certain property of the defendant which the claimant desires to be levied on and sold.—*City of Leesburg v. quire the creditor to point out property for levy. Thus, where there is any reasonable ground to induce the officer to believe that in levying an execution he may make a mistake and expose himself to an action for damages, he may require the creditor to point out the property for levy;⁵¹ but, although the pointing out of property by the creditor on the failure of the debtor to do so is a protection to the sheriff, it is not essential to the validity of the levy.⁵² On the other hand, an officer to whom a writ is delivered for execution is not compelled, in the absence of statute, to levy on the particular property pointed out by the judgment creditor, provided he levies on other property sufficient to satisfy the process;⁵³ nor is he bound to follow the instructions of the judgment creditor in the execution of the writ if they are oppressive or will produce a great sacrifice of the property of the judgment debtor.⁵⁴

(3) By Court

Ordinarily the court gives no directions concerning the property to be levied on.

Ordinarily the court gives no directions concerning the property to be levied on.⁵⁵

(4) Where There Are Several Defendants

An execution against several defendants may be levied on the property of any one or more of them.

Where an officer has an execution against a plurality of defendants, he is not bound to levy it so far as practicable equally on the property of each, or to attempt to enforce contribution among defendants, but he may, either by direction of the judgment creditor or of his own volition, levy the execution on the property of any one or more of defendants, leaving them to settle among themselves the proportion which each ought to contribute;⁵⁶ he is not bound to regard instructions from one defendant to levy on the property of another,⁵⁷ or to regard any equities subsisting between defendants, or between them and other creditors.⁵⁸ Accordingly an execution on a judgment recovered jointly against a husband and wife, without any specific directions as to the estate out of which it is to be satisfied, may, as a general rule, be levied on the property of either the husband or the wife.⁵⁹

(5) Encumbered and Alienated Property

Encumbered or alienated property subject to the lien of the judgment may be levied on without first resorting to other property belonging to the debtor, although in a proper case equity will grant relief to the encumbrancer or purchaser.

Where the debtor has alienated or encumbered his land subject to the lien of a judgment, and an execution is thereafter issued on such judgment, the creditor who issues the execution may levy on the encumbered or alienated property without first resorting to other property belonging to the debtor,⁶⁰ and is not required so to levy his execution as to make the alienees or encumbrancers contribute,⁶¹ or to levy on it in the inverse order in which it was alienated or encumbered.⁶² It has been said, however, that where the debtor has sold property, and has other property out of which satisfaction may be made, there can be no reason but mere wantonness for levying upon the property which has been sold.⁶³

A court of law out of which an execution has been issued has ordinarily no jurisdiction, on the petition of an alienee or encumbrancer, to make an order controlling plaintiff's levy.⁶⁴ Equity, however, will grant relief to encumbrancers and alienees by injunction, or, after a sale has been made, if a surplus remains after satisfying the execution, by directing the distribution of the surplus in an equitable manner, carrying out the doctrine that where a creditor has a right to resort to two funds for the satisfaction of his debt, the party who has a subsequent or inferior claim on one fund only may compel the creditor having the superior claim to exhaust the other fund before resorting to that with relation to which such subsequent claim exists.⁶⁵

§ 96. — Force, Fraud, or Other Wrongful Act in Levying Writ

a. Force

b. Fraud or other wrongful act

a. Force

Generally an officer may force an entry into any enclosure except the judgment debtor's dwelling house in order to levy an execution.

As a general rule an officer may force an entry into any enclosure⁶⁶ except the dwelling house of the judgment debtor⁶⁷ in order to levy a fieri facias on the debtor's goods; and even in the case of the debtor's home,⁶⁸ when the officer is once inside, he may break open inner doors⁶⁹ or trunks⁷⁰ to come at the goods.

Accordingly an officer is justified in forcibly entering the house of a third person, if the property of defendant is therein or he has good reason for suspecting that it is, and after demand for admittance and refusal,⁷¹ although he enters upon a third person's premises at his peril, and it has been held that he is a trespasser if it appears that defendant had no property there.⁷² So, where an officer who has entered a house to levy commences a levy or is ejected, he may break open the door in order to reënter or carry off the property.⁷³

b. Fraud or Other Wrongful Act

A levy procured through fraud, trickery, or trespass is invalid.

A levy which is procured through fraud, trickery or trespass is invalid,⁷⁴ as where it is made by means of an unlawful breaking or forcing of doors, see § 96 a supra; or where the officer or creditor fraudulently or wrongfully acquires possession of the property for the purpose of levying on it;⁷⁵ or where the property is brought within the jurisdiction, for the purpose of being levied on, through fraud or other wrongful act on the part of the officer⁷⁶ or of the execution creditor.⁷⁷

Forcing outer door

(1) Under the common law and statutes declaratory thereof, an officer cannot legally break open an outer door of the judgment debtor's dwelling house for the purpose of levying a fieri facias on his goods.—Schork v. Calloway, 265 S.W. 807,

(3) But there is also authority for the view that such a door is not an "outer door" if the landlord or owner lives in the building with his tenants.—Cantrell v. Conner, 6 Daly, N. Y., 39—23 C.J. p 432 note 21 [a].

(4) In any event, the general rule prohibiting the forcing of outer doors applies only where the seizure is attempted under a fieri facias and not where it is sought under an order directing the seizure of specific property.—Schork v. Calloway, supra—23 C.J. p 431 note 15 [b].

Protection limited to dwelling house

(1) The protection against forcible entry of the debtor's dwelling house extends only to his dwelling house and hence any other building may be broken open in order to levy an execution.—Silverman v. Stein, 217 N.W. 785, 242 Mich. 64, 57 A.L.R. 209—23 C.J. p 432 note 17.

(1) General Considerations

The sufficiency of a levy on personal property depends largely on the circumstances of each case, the applicable statutes if any, the character of the property levied on, and the status of the person challenging its sufficiency. The debtor's consent is never essential.

While some general rules can be laid down as to the sufficiency of a levy on personal property, yet each case is largely governed by its own circumstances,⁷⁸ and it is always necessary to take into consideration the statutes, if any, governing the sufficiency of the levy,⁷⁹ the character of the property levied on,⁸⁰ and whether the person raising objections to the levy is the debtor or a third person, since a levy may be invalid as against strangers but valid as against the debtor.⁸¹ In general, however, it may be said that where the statute prescribes the mode of levy, strict compliance with the statutory requirements is essential.⁸² Moreover, the sufficiency of a levy depends on what is done rather than on the intent with which it is done;⁸³ and while the debtor's knowledge and acquiescence may make it unimportant for the officer to pursue every step necessary to perfect a complete levy, with the same nicety and particularity he would be otherwise required to do, the debtor's consent is never essential to the validity of a levy.⁸⁴

Excessive levy. Where an execution is levied on a larger interest in certain personal property than the debtor owns, the levy is nevertheless valid as to the interest actually owned.⁸⁵

(2) Right to Enter on Premises

A levying officer may enter the debtor's premises to make a levy and he may be accompanied by the creditor or his agent.

The officer may enter on the debtor's premises to levy on his goods without committing a trespass,⁸⁶ but he is not authorized to turn the debtor out and take exclusive possession of his premises.⁸⁷ The creditor or his agent is likewise authorized to enter on the debtor's premises or enter his house with the officer, and to remain there long enough to show property to the officer, and while the officer is taking an inventory.⁸⁸

As appears supra, § 96 a, a sheriff may also enter on the premises of a third person for the purpose of levying on the debtor's goods.

"pen and ink levy," as an attempted levy made by merely indorsing on the writ the fact of the levy has been called, is insufficient;⁹⁰ nor can a levy be presumed from the mere delivery of an execution to the sheriff, without any act or proceeding by him under it, to take possession of the property.⁹¹ The officer must assume dominion and control over the property and momentarily take it into his custody, and perform distinct acts indicating his intention to pursue the property for the purpose of satisfying the writ,⁹² although it is not necessary that he actually touch the property, if he does not remove it.⁹³ There must be some act which amounts to a change of possession, or which is equivalent to a claim of dominion over the property, coupled with power to enforce it.⁹⁴ Where chattels are in full view of the officer, they are within his power, since he can remove them or place a person in custody of them.⁹⁵

(b) Actual or Constructive Seizure

To constitute a valid levy, seizure, either actual or constructive, is necessary.

In order to constitute a valid levy on personal property, seizure, either actual or constructive, is necessary.⁹⁶ Actual seizure is accomplished by a manucaption of the thing intended to be seized.⁹⁷ A constructive seizure is accomplished by the actual reduction by the officer of the property intended to be seized to his own control.⁹⁸ In general, it may be said that the levy shall be such a custody as to enable an officer to retain and assert his power and control over the property, so that it cannot be withdrawn or taken by another without the officer knowing it.⁹⁹

Necessity of actual possession or seizure. Although in some jurisdictions it is required by statute that the levying officer must take actual possession of the property levied on if it is capable of manual delivery,¹ generally, in the absence of such

Excluding constructive possession

"The word 'levy' as defined by our statute means actual seizure, that is, the officer must take actual possession of the goods, and this language would seem to exclude all idea of a constructive possession."—Douglas v. Orr, 58 Mo. 573, 575.

However, it would seem that, even where the statute requires the taking of actual possession, any exercise or claim of dominion, although by mere words, the officer having the goods within his power, is sufficient.—Douglas v. Orr, supra.

In Washington

(1) The statutes contemplate that when it is possible to do so the levying officer must take actual possession of the property levied on.—

statutory requirement, actual seizure or the taking of manual possession is not necessary to constitute a valid levy,² but it is sufficient that the officer has the property in view and where he can control it at the time of making the levy, and that he assumes dominion over it for the express purpose of holding it under the writ.³ An apparent conflict in the decisions, however, results from broad statements that in order to constitute a levy there must be an actual seizure or an actual taking of possession,⁴ but this conflict is more apparent than real since what is generally meant by such expressions is that an actual seizure or manucaption is essential in the absence of the doing of that which is the equivalent thereof.⁵

(c) Act Amounting to Trespass as Test

To render a levy valid it is frequently said that the officer must do such acts as would, but for the writ, make him a trespasser, or such acts as will enable him to maintain trespass or replevin against others.

A favorite expression of the courts, in passing on the validity of a levy on chattels, is that the officer must do such acts as would, but for the protection of the process, make him a trespasser; and this is said to be the true criterion of a levy.⁶ Another criterion of a levy is the doing of such acts by the officer as will enable him to maintain trespass or replevin against any stranger who interferes with the possession of the property.⁷

(d) Removal of Property

Generally an officer is not required to remove chattels levied on.

In England in order to make a valid levy on personally the officer must enter on the premises where the goods are, and take possession of them, and either actually remove them or leave an assistant or bailiff in charge of them; and to leave the property in the possession of the debtor is considered a badge of fraud.⁸ In this country the general rule is that it is not necessary that the officer levying an execution on chattels capable of manual seizure should take possession of them and actually remove them,⁹ and the levy is not vitiated by the leaving of the property in the possession of the debtor,¹⁰ un-

(2) When actual possession cannot be taken, all that is necessary is that the officer take constructive possession by giving notice to the owner that the property is levied on and will be sold—Swanson v. Olympic Peninsula Motor Coach Co., supra—Johnson v. Dahlquist, 226 P. 817, 130 Wash. 29.

less power to dispose of it is granted,¹¹ although the lien may be lost by so leaving the property for an unreasonable period or by direction of the creditor, see infra § 137. In some states, however, it has been held that chattels capable of manual delivery should not be allowed to remain in the possession of the debtor.¹² At any event, as against the debtor, the officer need not take chattels into his possession where they are present in view and under his control, and the debtor, either by positive or negative acts, waives an actual seizure and requests that the property shall be left in his possession, or consents to a levy being made without the removal of the chattels.¹³ So, where the debtor assents to the levy and executes a forthcoming bond, he is estopped from objecting that the levy was not properly made because the property was not actually taken into the sheriff's custody and removed by him.¹⁴ It is well settled that whether it is absolutely necessary or not to remove chattels, the officer may take them away if he chooses or sees fit to do so, especially when he thinks their removal necessary for his own security.¹⁵

(e) Declaration of Levy

The levying officer must assert his title to the personality by virtue of the execution by clear and unequivocal acts or declarations.

An officer, in making a levy on personal property, must assert his title thereto by virtue of the execution by acts or declarations of a clear and unequivocal character.¹⁶ It is not sufficient for the officer to announce that he is at the place for the purpose of making a levy.¹⁷

(4) View of Property

Generally, to constitute a valid levy, as against third persons at least, the officer must have the property within view when the levy is made.

The general rule is that in order to constitute a valid levy, as against third persons at least, the officer must have the property within view at the time of making the levy,¹⁸ unless the wrongful act of the debtor makes a view impossible¹⁹ or other legal excuse appears.²⁰ However, the rule is laid down in some jurisdictions that it is not necessary to the validity of the levy, at least as against the debtor, that the officer should be within view of the property at the time of the levy, provided he makes or is furnished an inventory of the property levied on, and the control of the property by the officer is acknowledged or acquiesced in by the debtor.²¹ So it has been held that, where defendant acknowledges the levy by executing a forthcoming bond, the levy is sufficient, although not within the view of the officer.²²

Goods in building. Where goods are in a building and not in sight, the officer cannot make a levy by merely making a proclamation and indorsing a levy, but he must enter and obtain a view of the goods.²³ It has been held that, where a building is locked, a levy is not sufficient merely where a guard is placed on the premises,²⁴ or strips are nailed across the door and the debtor notified,²⁵ or the officer proclaims a levy and states that he will break and enter the store in the morning.²⁶

cient levy on its contents, although the contents are not known to the officer.²⁷

(5) Open and Notorious Acts

The acts of an officer in making a levy should be open and unequivocal; but witnesses to a levy are not essential.

The acts of an officer in making a levy should be open and unequivocal, and nothing should be done by him to cause a concealment of the transaction.²⁸ A secret levy will as a rule be held to be invalid as against third persons.²⁹

Witnesses. It is proper and prudent for the officer to call on some one or more persons of the neighborhood to witness his acts, and for him to indorse the fact of his having done so on the writ;³⁰ but this is not essential to the validity of the levy.³¹

(6) Levy on Part in Name of Whole

A seizure of a part of a parcel of goods in the name of the whole is a good seizure of the whole.

A part of a parcel of goods may be seized in the name of the whole.³² In such case, a part of the goods is not actually seized, and may not be seen, yet the whole is levied on.³³ Thus a seizure of a part of the property of the judgment debtor in a building, by virtue of a fieri facias, in the name of the whole property, is a valid levy on all of the property, and the inventory made out by the officer furnishes the means of ascertaining what goods were levied on.³⁴

Contents of a safe deposit box may be levied on by obtaining actual custody thereof or by assuming dominion over them by some act as nearly equivalent to a seizure as is practicable.

Contents of a safe deposit box may be levied on by obtaining actual custody thereof³⁵ or, if this is impossible, by assuming dominion over them by some act as nearly equivalent to a seizure as is practicable.³⁶

(2) Growing Crops

A levy on a growing crop may be made by obtaining a view of it and assuming dominion over it by some act as nearly equivalent to a seizure as practicable, and by making a memorandum of the levy and informing the debtor thereof.

The rule requiring an actual seizure to constitute a valid levy of personal property capable of being readily removed does not apply in the case of a growing crop, since actual possession of a field of standing grain is not practicable.³⁷ A levy on a growing crop may be made by obtaining a view of it and assuming dominion over it by some act as nearly equivalent to a seizure as is practicable, and by making a memorandum of the levy and informing the debtor of the levy.³⁸ It is not necessary

Actual custody of the contents of a safe deposit box is required to constitute a valid levy thereon since such contents are capable of manual delivery.—Press v. Vose, 11 N.Y.S.2d 863, 171 Misc. 387. Entering box by force see supra § 96 a.

36. Refusal to open box

Although it is ordinarily the duty of the sheriff in executing process either to take possession of the article on which he levies or at least to have it in sight, the levy will be sustained, although the property was not in view, where the wrongful act of defendant made it impossible, or where other legal excuse appeared, so that the sheriff can levy on the contents of a safe deposit box which the defendant and the lessor of the box refuse to open.—Trainer v. Saunders, 113 A. 681, 270 Pa. 451, 19 A.L.R. 861.

that the officer shall keep a watch or guard over it.³⁹ It has been held that the officer may harvest the crop when it is mature,⁴⁰ but that it is not his duty to do so before the day of the sale, although it matures before such day.⁴¹ Under some statutes crops cannot be levied on until matured.⁴²

(3) Intermingled Property

Where the debtor's goods are so intermingled with the goods of another that they cannot be distinguished, the officer as a general rule may levy on the whole.

Where the goods belonging to the debtor are so mixed or confused with goods belonging to a stranger that the property of the one cannot be identified and distinguished from the property of the other, and the stranger fails to point out to the sheriff or designate the goods which are not subject to execution, the sheriff may levy on the whole.⁴³ The doctrine of confusion is extended, however, no further than necessity requires, and it seems that no forfeiture will result in consequence of the confusion of goods owned by two persons, unless there is a willful or wrongful invasion of rights.⁴⁴

(4) Livestock

In levying an execution on livestock there must be some act done by the officer equivalent to a seizure.

A levy on livestock has been held sufficient where the officer counts and makes an inventory of the livestock and informs the debtor of the levy.⁴⁵ In some jurisdictions, in the case of levy on livestock running at large, an absolute manucaption is not necessary; but there must be some act done by the officer equivalent to a seizure, such as a memorandum on the writ of the number of animals seized on, and a notice to the judgment debtor or his agent of the levy.⁴⁶ Even in the case of cattle not on range, but confined in a small pasture, it is not necessary that the officer immediately remove the cattle or place some one there to guard them, provided he professes to levy and assume control of them by virtue of the writ.⁴⁷

(5) Mortgaged Chattels

Where an execution may be levied on mortgaged chattels, the officer is generally authorized to perform all such acts as may be requisite to bring the property to a sale. Under some statutes, however, the amount due on the mortgage must be tendered or secured before taking the property.

Where an execution may be levied on mortgaged chattels, and the chattels are allowed to remain in the possession of the mortgagor, the officer is authorized to perform all such acts and take such steps as may be requisite to bring the property to a sale, and to this end he is authorized, as against the mortgagee, to take the property into his possession and custody, and to exhibit it at the sale;⁴⁸ but in whatever manner the levy is made, it must be subordinate to the rights of the mortgagee.⁴⁹ By allowing the officer to detain the mortgaged goods in a convenient and safe custody for the time requisite to bring the property to sale, the substantial interests of all concerned will generally be promoted and unseemly scrambles for possession will be averted.⁵⁰

Goods in possession of mortgagee. While it has been denied that the officer has the right to take mortgaged chattels out of the possession of the mortgagee,⁵¹ it has also been held that the sheriff is entitled to the custody and control of the prop-

Statutes regulating levy

(1) Under statutes so providing a levy on live stock running at large on a range, and which cannot be herded or penned without great inconvenience and expense, may be made by designating, by reasonable estimate, the number of animals, and describing them by their marks and brands or either, provided such levy is made in the presence of two or more credible persons, and notice thereof is given in writing to the owner or his herder or agent if residing within the county and known to the officer.—Hagan v. Cosper, 292 P. 1020, 37 Ariz. 209—23 C. J. p 441 note 29 [b].

(2) No valid levy was made, where sheriff merely rode out among steers, counted them, and left them without segregating them from other steers in pasture or making arrangements to put anyone in charge, there being no "taking into possession" as required by statute.—Western Nat. erty until the time of the sale, notwithstanding the mortgagee at the time of the levy is in the actual possession or has the right of possession,⁵² but that, after breach of the conditions of the mortgage, if the mortgagee by the terms of the mortgage is entitled to the possession of the property, the officer has no right to take possession.⁵³

Levy on part or whole of mortgaged property. Where a mortgage covers different articles of personalty, it is the duty of the officer to levy on the whole thereof, if he can find them, and sell such articles in one lot or parcel, subject to the mortgage, and not to levy on specific articles,⁵⁴ but, if it is necessary to do so, he may take possession of distinct articles separately.⁵⁵

Tendering or securing amount due on mortgage. In some states by force of statute it is necessary to tender to the mortgagee the amount due to him under the mortgage before taking the property,⁵⁶ or within a specified time thereafter,⁵⁷ or to secure the same.⁵⁸ Under some statutes, however, a tender of the amount due is not essential where the execution creditor presents a verified statement that the mortgage is invalid for reasons therein specified, and delivers to the officer a good and sufficient indemnity bond.⁵⁹

(6) Ponderous and Bulky Articles

In levying on ponderous or bulky articles, the officer need only go to them, assume dominion over them, forbid their removal, and indorse on his writ the fact of levy.

The officer may suffer ponderous and bulky articles, such as lumber, stone, grain, and ore, to remain in the possession of the debtor, and need only go to them and assume dominion over them and forbid their removal, and indorse on his writ the fact that he has made a levy.⁶⁰

Fixtures and machinery. The general rule is that, fixtures and ponderous machinery being incapable of actual possession, any notorious act of the officer asserting title under a levy is sufficient.⁶¹

Buildings. In making a levy on a building as personal property, the officer need not take manual possession of it,⁶² but it is sufficient if he goes to the building and there informs the debtor of the levy and forbids interference with any part of the property.⁶³

(7) Property Held Jointly

Property owned by a judgment debtor jointly with another must be levied on in the manner prescribed by statute.

Where a judgment debtor owns personal property as tenant in common or joint owner with others, and the statute prescribes the method of levying execution on such property, the prescribed method must be followed.⁶⁴ In some jurisdictions it is the duty of the officer to levy on and take into his custody the whole of the property, although

Amount of bond.

Under a statute requiring the amount of the bond given by the execution creditor to the officer to be "double the amount of the mortgage debt or double the value of the mortgaged property, as the officer may determine and require," the officer is invested with authority to determine in a preliminary way the value of the mortgaged property, and in determining this question all that is required is that he make a bona fide use of his judgment; hence, the fact that his valuation is only one half that subsequently found to be correct by the court does not invalidate the levy in the absence of fraud on the part of the execution creditor.—Security First Nat. he can only sell the judgment debtor's undivided interest therein.⁶⁵ In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that an execution against one part owner cannot be rightfully levied on the whole property, but only on the debtor's share therein.⁶⁶ Under some statutes the levy on personal property jointly owned by the debtor and another creates a lien but gives no authority to sell,⁶⁷ and the levying officer cannot deprive a joint owner of the possession of the property, without his written consent, except for the purpose of having it inventoried and appraised.⁶⁸ Under other statutes the undivided interest of one not in possession may be levied on by giving notice to the person in possession,⁶⁹ and the officer should not levy by taking possession.⁷⁰

(8) Property in Possession of Third Persons

Where the statute prescribes the method of levying on the debtor's personalty in the possession of others, the prescribed method must be followed. In the case of pledged chattels possession ordinarily should not be taken.

While the general rule requiring an officer, in making a levy on personalty, to reduce it to possession or bring it within his immediate control, see supra subdivision a (3) (a), of this section, has been applied to a levy on personalty of the debtor in the possession of third persons,⁷¹ in some states, by statute, if personalty is in the possession of one other than the debtor, the levy must be made by giving notice to the person in possession, and no

lien is created by assuming to take possession of the property.⁷² It has also been held that, where a chattel has been pawned, pledged, or leased, the sheriff, in levying an execution against the lessor or bailor, should not take possession of the chattel, because the lessor or bailor has no present right of possession;⁷³ but on the other hand, it has been held that the chattel may be taken subject to the rights of the lessee or bailee.⁷⁴

(9) Property Sold under Conditional Sales Contract

A vendor's interest in personalty sold under a conditional sales contract may be levied on in the manner prescribed by statute.

A vendor's interest in personalty sold under a conditional sales contract may be levied on in the manner prescribed by statute.⁷⁵

§ 98. — Choses in Action in General

The mode prescribed by statute must be followed in making a levy on choses in action.

At common law choses in action were not subject to levy under execution, see supra § 28, and consequently the common law furnishes no rule for the method of making a levy on this species of property.⁷⁶ The statutes authorizing levies on choses in action, however, frequently prescribe the mode of levy, in which case the mode prescribed must be strictly followed.⁷⁷ Generally, under the statutes, the levy is effected by leaving a copy of the writ with the person indebted to the judgment debtor together with a notice of the levy,⁷⁸ and by giving notice of the levy to the judgment debtor.⁷⁹

Promissory notes and the like. In jurisdictions where the rule is adhered to that, in order to constitute a valid levy on tangible property, such property must be taken into actual possession by the officer, a sale of a bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness belonging to the judgment debtor, but never in the possession of the officer, confers no title and is void for the reason that there has never been a valid levy on such property.⁸⁰ It has been held, however, that the debt may be levied on and held, although it is evidenced by a negotiable⁸¹ or nonnegotiable⁸² note.

§ 99. — Corporate Stock

A levy on corporate stock must be made in substantial compliance with the mode prescribed by statute.

Corporate stock being of such character and often so situated as not to be capable of actual seizure by the officer, the mode of levy on such property is regulated entirely by the applicatory statutory provisions, the usual method of making levy being by leaving a copy of the writ with the president, secretary, or other designated officer of the corporation, together with a notice setting forth the shares of stock held by the judgment debtor which are levied on under the writ,⁸³ or by giving notice of the levy to the proper officers or agents of the corporation⁸⁴ and to defendant.⁸⁵ Under the Uniform Stock Transfer Act, however, no levy on shares of stock for which a certificate is outstanding is valid until such certificate is actually seized by the officer making the levy, or is surrendered to the corporation issuing it, or its transfer by the holder is enjoined.⁸⁶ It is generally held that the statutory provisions regarding the manner in which the execution shall be levied are imperative,⁸⁷ and that the levy must be at least in substantial compliance with the mode prescribed;⁸⁸ otherwise the levy and sale thereunder are void.⁸⁹ Failure to give notice of the levy to the execution

Interest in pending suit

(1) Generally in order to constitute a valid levy on a judgment debtor's interest in a pending lawsuit, notice of levy must be served on the debtor, and the mere service of a copy of the writ of execution together with a notice of levy on the clerk of the court before which the suit is pending is insufficient.

(2) Where the statute so requires, notice of levy must be served on all parties to the suit in which the interest is seized; and in such case service of notice on counsel for the parties in such suit is insufficient where the suit in which the interest is seized is not the suit in which the writ of execution is issued.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. debtor is not fatal,⁹⁰ unless such notice is required by statute.⁹¹

§ 100. — Exhausting Personalty before Levy on Realty

As a general rule the debtor has a right to have his personal goods exhausted before any of his real estate can be levied on.

The generally prevailing rule, adopted in some jurisdictions by statute, is that the debtor has the right to have his personal goods exhausted before any of his real estate can be taken,⁹² although in some jurisdictions such an exhaustion of the personal property is not required before levying on the real estate,⁹³ and under some statutes personal property cannot be taken under execution until after the judgment debtor has been given an opportunity to turn over real estate.⁹⁴ A levy need not first be made on personal property if it is valueless,⁹⁵ or if it is so encumbered that it probably would not produce anything on the execution.⁹⁶ Where the debtor has both personal and real property, although the personal property is not sufficient, it should be first levied on and first sold; but the real estate may be levied on after the levy on the personal property, without awaiting a sale of the personal property.⁹⁷

Where sufficient personalty cannot be found. An officer is justified in subjecting real property of the execution debtor under his writ if he has no knowledge of personal property out of which his levy might be made, and where there is no evidence that by the exercise of reasonable diligence he could discover such property;⁹⁸ and the officer is not bound to search for personal property beyond his bailiwick.⁹⁹ The right to levy on real property is contingent on failure to find personal property on which to levy rather than on the nonexistence thereof.¹

Return of nulla bona. A return by the officer of "no personal property found" is sufficient to justify a levy on the real property of the judgment debtor.² In some states, by statute or otherwise, such a return is necessary before a levy can be made on real property,³ but in other states no such return is necessary.⁴

An alias execution before levying on the realty is not required, the return nulla bona being equivalent thereto.⁵

Waiver of right to have personal property taken. The right of the debtor to have his land exempted until the exhaustion of his chattels may be waived or forfeited;⁶ and if the debtor fails or refuses to turn out chattels, the sheriff may proceed in the first instance to levy on land,⁷ and the debtor has also been held to waive such right by fraudulently conveying all his property.⁸ The officer holding an execution against the judgment debtor may, at the request of the latter, levy on his real estate to the exclusion of his personalty, even where the personalty is sufficient to satisfy the execution.⁹

Execution against joint debtors. It is generally held that, where an execution is issued against more than one defendant, and one of them has no personal property, his land may be taken in execution regardless of the fact that the other defendants have chattels subject to execution,¹⁰ but there is authority to the contrary.¹¹

Title of purchaser when chattels are not first taken. Statutory provisions requiring personal property to be resorted to before land have been held to be so far directory that if the sheriff levies on and sells land without exhausting the debtor's chattels the sale will be valid,¹² and, as appears in § 299 c infra, the title of an innocent purchaser who has not been instrumental in causing the sheriff to violate the law will be upheld.

Presumption that officer did his duty. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the officer did his duty and levied on land because he could not find chattels.¹³

§ 101. — Levy on Real Property and Interests Therein

a. In general

b. Moiety of, or interest in, realty

a. In General

A levy on realty must be made in the manner prescribed by law in the particular jurisdiction.

Where the statute prescribes the method of levying execution on real estate or interests therein, the prescribed method must be followed in making a levy on this species of property.¹⁴ In the absence of contrary statute, a levy on, or seizure of, real property under an execution may be legally made either by the officer going on the land and making it, or, without going on the premises, by simply indorsing a description of the property on the writ and stating that it is levied on for the purpose thereof,¹⁵ with notice to the owner or person in possession, see § 104 infra; or by any act on the part of the officer showing an intent to sell the specific land and subject it to the satisfaction of the judgment,¹⁶ although it has been held that the officer must take the property into his possession and custody and that mere notice of seizure is not sufficient.¹⁷ In some jurisdictions, by force of statute, levying, with respect to property other than chattels, is carried out by registration;¹⁸ but

(1) It has been held that if some of defendants have personal property liable to the satisfaction of the debt and others have not, it is the duty of the officer to proceed against the former, or either of them, until sufficient property is found to discharge the debt.—Hassell v. Southern Bank of Kentucky, 2 Head 381.

Object of such statutes is to prevent confusion and litigation concerning the levying of executions and the clouding of titles of real estate attempted to be levied on by giving notice to all persons concerned.—Romoli v. Motta, 194 A. 733, 59 R.I. 201.

Construction and operation of statutes

Statutes providing that officer in levying execution on realty shall file notice with recorder of deeds or clerk of town or city in which realty lies, and providing that such filing shall be sufficient levy on realty "described in said execution," are not repugnant to statute which prescribes form of writ of execution but does not provide for description of the realty to be levied on, since words "described in said execution" are to be construed as referring to description in copy of writ of execution filed with clerk or recorder; and under such statutes the better practice is for the officer to indorse on the original execution a description of the property levied on, so that the copy filed is an actual copy of the execution retained by him.—Romoli v. Motta, supra.

in other jurisdictions this is not necessary.¹⁹

Entry to take momentary seisin. An entry on the premises by the officer, or by the creditor accompanied by the officer, for the purpose of taking a momentary seisin and possession without actually evicting or dispossessing the debtor or his tenants is authorized and does not constitute a trespass.²⁰

Special execution or order of sale. An execution or order of sale commanding the sale of real estate therein specifically described need not be levied; nor need the officer take possession of any part of the land, put up a notice thereon, or make proclamation thereon to the effect that he has made a levy.²¹

Excessive levy. Where an execution is levied on more land than the judgment debtor owns, or on more than his share in a certain tract of land, the levy is nevertheless valid for as much of the land as he does own, or for his share thereof.²² Where a person owning a tract of land purchases an adjoining tract and makes it a part of the same farm, the whole may be levied on as one tract.²³

b. Moiety of, or Interest in, Realty

A levy on a moiety of, or interest in, realty should be made in the manner prescribed by law in the particular jurisdiction.

According to the better doctrine a levy on all the debtor's right, title, and interest in real property is sufficient, where the officer is unable to determine the real interest of the judgment debtor in such property, such a levy being in legal effect a levy on the property itself.²⁴ The rule is laid down in some jurisdictions that, where a judgment debtor has exclusive ownership of a parcel or tract of land, a levy by a judgment creditor on a mere interest therein is invalid.²⁵ So, also, a levy on a portion thereof may be void.²⁶

Interest of joint tenants or tenants in common. Where the statute prescribes the method of levying execution on the interest of the debtor in realty owned jointly with others, the prescribed method must be followed in making a levy on such interest.²⁷ Ordinarily, where there is a single tract or parcel of land owned by several in common or jointly, it is not proper to levy an execution against one of the cotenants or joint tenants by selecting and taking a part of the tract by metes and bounds, and seizing it as the debtor's share of the land, or to levy on the debtor's undivided interest in such portion; but the proper course is to levy on the debtor's interest in the whole tract,²⁸ and a levy on the whole tract will be valid as to the debtor's undivided part;²⁹ but a levy on a specific and defined portion of a larger tract has been supported as a levy on the debtor's interest in such portion.³⁰ If the property has been partitioned before judgment, the levy must be on the part set off to the debtor in severalty.³¹

Levy on portion of whole interest

If the debtor has a certain undivided interest, it has been held that the levy should be on such proportion of the debtor's interest in the whole as the amount of the execution bears to the value of his interest throughout the whole.—Hinman v. Leavenworth, 2 Conn. 244 note.

Where dower assigned

Where a part of land held in common is assigned as dower, the reversion of the dower and the residue of the land may be regarded in some respects as separate tenancies in common, so that a creditor of one of the tenants may levy on the debtor's share in them, in different proportions, or on his share in only one of them.—*Peabody v. tion creditor has the election to restrict his levy to the equity of redemption or to levy on the land;³² but where the title of the debtor is changed by the extinguishment of the mortgage, from an equity of redemption to an absolute estate, the execution must be levied on the land, and not as on an equity of redemption.³³ In other jurisdictions, however, where the land sought to be subjected is encumbered by a mortgage, the equity of redemption should be levied on eo nomine, and a levy on the land does not operate to pass to the purchaser the equity of redemption.³⁴ It has been held that a levy on an equity of redemption in mortgaged premises, if on any portion less than the whole, must be on an aliquot portion of the whole and not on a part described by metes and bounds.³⁵

Leasehold interest. Under statute in some jurisdictions, leasehold interests are to be seized and levied on as realty,³⁶ but in the absence of such a statute a leasehold interest in land is levied on and sold as a chattel,³⁷ but the sheriff is not required to exercise any dominion or control over it founded on an idea of a right to the possession.³⁸

§ 102. — Property Already Levied On

Where an officer holds property of a judgment debtor by virtue of a valid levy, the reception of a second writ of execution ordinarily operates as a constructive levy on all the property held by virtue of the first writ.

Where an officer has property of a judgment debtor in his possession by virtue of a valid levy, the reception of a second writ of execution operates as a constructive levy on all the property held by him by virtue of the first writ,³⁹ it ordinarily being sufficient, where indorsement is required, to indorse the levy on the second writ.⁴⁰ Where, however, the levy under the original writ in the hands of the officer is void, a constructive levy of subsequent execution made by indorsement will not bind the property against subsequent executions actually levied thereon.⁴¹

Levy by different officer. Since an officer holding a subsequent writ is not authorized to take property into his control to the exclusion of an officer in possession thereof by virtue of a prior writ, a notification by the officer holding a subsequent writ to the officer in possession, and the indorsement of the levy on the writ, constitutes a valid levy.⁴²

Property previously attached. Where an execution creditor has a lien on property by virtue of a prior valid attachment thereof, the delivery of the execution to the proper officer constitutes a valid levy on such property,⁴³ but this rule does not apply where the previous attachment was invalid.⁴⁴ It has been held that the officer executing a writ of attachment is not, as a matter of right, entitled to levy the execution issued in the action, but it may be given to another officer for service.⁴⁵ Where the debtor fails to point out property to be levied on, the levying officer is not bound to seize property already under attachment for a larger amount than its value.⁴⁶

Property attached in another suit

Where property is in the hands of an officer by virtue of an attachment in another suit, the mere receipt of an execution and indorsement thereon of the time of its receipt does not operate as a constructive levy of the execution on such property.—Santa Fe Bank v. Haskell County Bank, 53 P. 132, 59 Kan. 354.

ized, at any time before the return day, to make such further levies as may be necessary to satisfy the execution.

The rule is universally recognized that an officer, notwithstanding a prior levy, is authorized, at any time before the return day of the writ, to make such further levies on the property of the judgment debtor as may be necessary to satisfy the execution in his hands;⁴⁷ but an insufficient levy cannot be fortified by a levy made after the return of the execution.⁴⁸ A direction to levy on only a part of the debtor's property does not prevent a subsequent levy under the same writ on other property of the debtor.⁴⁹

Where sufficient property is levied on. Where an officer has once levied on the property of the debtor, sufficient to satisfy the execution, he cannot make a second levy, but must pursue the first levy until it has been disposed of, and until it is satisfactorily shown that the first levy is unavailing.⁵⁰ This is the rule, at least, as to a levy on personal property,⁵¹ although the general rule as to land is that a levy thereon, of whatever value, while undisposed of, does not operate as a bar to subsequent attempts to enforce the collection of the judgment;⁵² but in some jurisdictions no distinction is made between realty and personalty, and until an apparently sufficient levy whether on land or personal property is disposed of, a second or further levy cannot be made.⁵³ However, even as to personal property, the satisfaction is prima facie only, and the sheriff has a large discretion in determining whether a second levy may be made, because the sufficiency of the property first taken cannot be ascertained with certainty until the sale.⁵⁴ So also if the first levy is unproductive, for example, if the property is restored to the debtor and the levy is raised, the officer is authorized to make an additional levy.⁵⁵

Property of joint defendants. Where an execution issues on a judgment against two or more joint defendants, or a principal and surety, and the execution is levied on the property of one of defendants or the principal, but nothing is realized under such levy, the fact of the former levy will not invalidate a subsequent levy on and sale of the property of the other codefendant or surety;⁵⁶ but it has been held that where there are two joint debtors and a levy has been made on sufficient property of one of them, the levy cannot be countermanded for the purpose of levying for the whole debt on the individual property of the other debtor.⁵⁷

§ 104. — Notice of Levy

Where the statute so provides a judgment debtor is entitled to notice of a levy on his property.

In some jurisdictions the judgment debtor is by statutory enactment entitled to notice of levy on his property, at least if land is levied on;⁵⁸ but in other jurisdictions such notice is not required.⁵⁹

Notice to person in possession

(2) If the judgment debtor is in possession of the land levied on, notice of levy should be given to him.—Haynes v. Arnold, 114 S.E. 360, 154 Ga. 377.

(3) Notice to third person in possession of debtor's personality see supra § 97 b (8).

Renewal of notice

Change of date of execution sale does not necessitate issuance of new notice of seizure.—Austin v. Currie, 134 So. 723, 16 La.App. 375.

Defects in notice of seizure which do not mislead the persons involved are not necessarily fatal to the seizure.—Concordia Oil & Gas Co. v. Keenan, La.App., 153 So. 549.

59. Md.—State v. Boulden, 57 Md. 314.

23 C.J. p 451 note 50.

In North Dakota the law does not require the service of a notice of levy of execution on real estate, on the judgment debtor, although that practice is usually followed. Even if such notice were required, it would be sufficient if it complied with Comp.L.19013 § 7549, relating to the levy of attachments, which merely requires a description of the property levied on.—Flinch, Van

The statutory provisions as to such notice vary in the different states, notice of the levy being required, under some statutes, only where the property sought to be levied on is situated in a county other than that of the residence of the judgment debtor, or than that from which the execution issued;⁶⁰ and under other statutes, only when the judgment debtor is in actual occupation and possession of the property;⁶¹ and under still others, where the officer levies on property of joint debtors in the possession of one of them, notice of the levy must be given to the other joint debtors.⁶² One to whom the debtor has made a fraudulent conveyance of his land, however, is not entitled to notice.⁶³

Effect of failure to give notice. The better doctrine is that the failure of the officer to give due notice of the levy to the judgment debtor, or his tenant in possession, where so required by statute, is a mere irregularity and does not render the sale made thereunder void;⁶⁴ but there are authorities to the effect that such a sale is invalid,⁶⁵ and that a debtor not served with such notice is not affected by proceedings to obtain a forced sale.⁶⁶

Service. Under statutes requiring service of notice of the levy on the judgment debtor, it has been usually held that this service must be on the judgment debtor personally, or his authorized agent.⁶⁷ It is not sufficient to serve it on a tenant residing on the premises,⁶⁸ unless the debtor resides out of the state;⁶⁹ or to serve it on the debtor's attorney, if the debtor himself is within the state.⁷⁰

Waiver. The statutory notice required to be given to the judgment debtor is for his benefit exclusively, and may be waived by him without prejudicing the rights of a purchaser or vitiating his title.⁷¹ Waiver of notice on the part of the judgment debtor will be presumed from various acts, such as the execution of a forthcoming bond,⁷² appearance in person or by agent at the sale and bidding on the property,⁷³ or the voluntary pointing out of property for levy.⁷⁴

In some jurisdictions an indorsement of the levy on the writ is essential to perfect the levy.

In making a levy, it is usual for the officer to indorse his levy on the writ, which indorsement does not constitute a levy, but is merely evidence of it.⁷⁵ An indorsement of the levy is highly proper and is to be recommended in all cases, whether it is actually necessary or not;⁷⁶ and in a number of jurisdictions, sometimes by force of statute, it is essential to a levy on land that the sheriff should make an indorsement of his levy,⁷⁷ although it has been held that an omission of such indorsement may be cured by the return.⁷⁸ In other ju-

Legalizing act

That there was a failure to comply with statutory provisions in reference to indorsement of levy on execution did not render execution invalid, in view of act legalizing all prior execution sales in which execution officer had failed to make entries.—Nelson v. Hayes, 269 N.W. 861, 222 Iowa 701.

Burden of proof

Objecting party has burden to affirmatively establish officer's failure to comply with statute requiring indorsements on execution.—Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., v. Block, 249 N.W. 395, 216 Iowa 401.

risdictions, however, it has been held unnecessary in levying on realty to indorse the levy.⁷⁹

Levy on chattels. In some jurisdictions, sometimes by force of statute, it is necessary to indorse on the writ a levy on chattels,⁸⁰ but in other jurisdictions this is not required to perfect the levy.⁸¹

b. Time of Indorsement

In the absence of contrary statute an indorsement of the levy may be made at any time before the return day of the writ.

Although it is necessary in some jurisdictions, under statutes so providing, that an indorsement of the levy should be made on the writ at the time the levy is made,⁸² the general rule, in the absence of contrary statute, is that the indorsement may be made at any time before the return day of the writ.⁸³ It has been held that an indorsement after the return day, considered as the levy and not the mere evidence thereof, is insufficient.⁸⁴

c. Formal Requisites

The levy of execution may be indorsed on the writ itself or on a paper attached thereto; and it is the better practice for the officer to sign the entry.

The levy of execution may be indorsed on the writ itself⁸⁵ or on a separate piece of paper attached thereto.⁸⁶ It is insufficient, however, to indorse the levy in a book or on a loose sheet of paper;⁸⁷ but the officer may make a memorandum of his levy on a separate piece of paper, and thereafter, before the return of the writ, copy the memorandum on the writ.⁸⁸

Signature. It is the better practice for the officer to sign the entry;⁸⁹ but it has been held that the indorsement need not be signed separately from the return,⁹⁰ and that, in the absence of express statutory provision, the omission of the signature of the officer from his indorsement made on the writ is a mere irregularity and not fatal to the levy, and the officer may amend the indorsement by adding his signature thereafter.⁹¹

Notice of levy

(1) It has been held that an attempted levy on corporate stock is void where the entry does not show service of notice of levy on the proper corporate officers as required by statute.—Cramer v. McDonald, 239 N.W. 101, 213 Iowa 454.

(2) But it has also been held that the entry need not state that notice of the levy was given to the party in possession, even though such notice is required by statute.—Keaton v. Farkas, 70 S.E. 1110, 136 Ga. 188—

technical precision in describing the acts performed, and it is sufficient if it appear, by reasonable construction, that everything necessary to constitute a valid levy has been performed;⁹³ but the fact of a levy must be stated in positive terms, and cannot be left to implication.⁹⁴ Whether the indorsement shows a sufficient levy is a question of law for the court.⁹⁵

Time of seizure. It is not necessary that the time of the seizure should be mentioned⁹⁶ unless required by statute.⁹⁷ If the month and year are stated the omission of the day has been held not fatal.⁹⁸ The dating of a levy before the date of the issuance of the execution, being an evident clerical mistake, will not vitiate the levy.⁹⁹

Time of entry. Generally the date on which the entry is made need not be stated.¹

Place of levy. Unless required by statute, it is not necessary to state where the levy was made.²

(2) Description of Property

(b) Description of land

(c) Description of personal property

(a) In General

Statutory requirements as to description of the property levied on must be substantially complied with in indorsing a levy.

Statutes prescribing the manner in which property levied on shall be described in an indorsement of the levy must be substantially complied with.³

(b) Description of Land

aa. In general

bb. Aider by, or reference to, other instruments

aa. In General

Land levied on should be properly described in the indorsement of the levy.

Although the sheriff need not have the premises surveyed,⁴ yet the premises levied on should be properly described in the indorsement of the levy, and it is not sufficient merely to indorse the fact of a levy.⁵ While the facts of the particular case largely govern the decisions holding certain descriptions of land sufficiently definite and certain,⁶ as well as those holding the descriptions insufficient,⁷ the governing rule is that the premises must be described with sufficient particularity and distinctness to enable a purchaser to know what he is buying, and to enable the officer to put the purchaser into possession of the right property,⁸ but technical accuracy or great particularity is not required.⁹ The description is sufficient if it enables one to locate the property and identify it when found.¹⁰ The description need not be as accurate as where lands are sold for taxes,¹¹ or as is employed in a deed or conveyance,¹² but it is sufficient if it would have passed title in an ordinary deed.¹³ A defective description of certain tracts of land indorsed on the writ will not vitiate the levy with regard to such tracts as are fully and properly described in the indorsement.¹⁴ A party may be estopped from questioning the sufficiency of the description in the levy.¹⁵

Less particularity required than in case of extent. Where a levy is made on land, to be followed afterward by a sale, such great strictness is not required in describing the premises as is necessary where land is extended, because the object of the extent is to pass the title.¹⁶

Repugnant and false description. The court will, if necessary to make the description certain, reject or reform so much of it as is repugnant or false.¹⁷

Quantity of land taken. Although the quantity of land is looked to, as it is in construing a deed, yet a mere statement as to the quantity of land taken, and its ownership, is too vague and uncertain.¹⁸

Metes and bounds. It is in general sufficient to describe land by metes and bounds; for example, to state that the land adjoins that of named persons, or that it is situated on a watercourse, etc.¹⁹ When some particulars of a boundary line of land levied on are erroneously recited in the indorsement on the writ, and yet from the whole description the premises levied on can be definitely ascertained, the levy is valid.²⁰

Legal subdivisions. Where land has been platted, the better description, if not the necessary one, is by reference to the plat, stating the number of the lot and block as given on the plat, together with such other descriptive facts as may be necessary to identify it.²¹

Description applicable to more than one tract. A levy which contains a description applicable to more than one piece of land is insufficient;²² and where a levy is made on a portion of a tract of land, which tract of land is properly described, the levy is insufficient if the particular portion of the tract is not specifically described.²³

bb. Aider by, or Reference to, Other Instruments

Land levied on may be described in the indorsement of the levy by reference to writings of record accurately describing it. A defective description in the indorsement may sometimes be cured by a proper description in a claim affidavit or the sheriff's deed.

It is not necessary that land levied on should be described in the indorsement of the levy by metes and bounds, and it is sufficient to describe it by reference to deeds or other writings of record in which the land is accurately described;²⁴ but the levy cannot be aided by a reference made in the levy to the newspaper advertisement of the sale.²⁵

Claim affidavit. A defect in the levy may be cured by recitals in the claim affidavit.²⁶

Sheriff's deed. The purchaser's title does not rest on the levy alone, but also on the sheriff's deed, and the latter instrument may sometimes be relied on to cure defects in the levy,²⁷ although there is authority to the contrary.²⁸ In any event, where the description in the sheriff's deed is indefinite and unreliable, or inconsistent with or repugnant to the levy, it cannot aid a defective description in the levy.²⁹

(c) Description of Personal Property

Personal property levied on should be described in the indorsement of the levy with particularity and distinctness.

Personal property levied on should be described in the indorsement of the levy with particularity and distinctness.³⁰

(3) Statement as to Ownership and Interest

Generally an entry of a levy on land should show whose land was levied on, particularly where the execution is against several defendants; and where a levy

28. Reason for rule

Where levy on land is void for lack of proper description, defect cannot be cured by proper description in deed made by sheriff in sale under levy, because deed would not conform to levy.—Burson v. Shields, 129 S.E. 22, 160 Ga. 723—Brown v. Moughon, 70 Ga. 756.

is made on property in which third persons are interested the entry should specify the interest levied on.

In levying an execution against a sole defendant, it is not necessary to state in the indorsement of the levy the ownership of the property seized since it is to be assumed that the officer pursued the authority given him, and levied on no other land than that belonging to the debtor; but it is the better practice to state that the property was levied on as the property of the judgment debtor,³¹ and if the property stands in the name of another it may be described as the property of the debtor,³² and need not be described as fraudulently standing in the name of such other.³³ Where the execution is against several defendants, the entry of levy must show whose land was levied on.³⁴

Defendant's interest in the land taken. A levy on a tract of land generally, without stating the debtor's interest therein, embraces whatever interest the debtor has in it, unless there is something in the levy restricting it to a particular part or share of the land,³⁵ and is ordinarily sufficient as a levy on a fee simple in the land.³⁶ However, a levy on property in which others besides defendant are interested should specify the interest levied on,³⁷ unless such fact appears from other recitals in the writ.³⁸

e. Amendment

An indorsement of a levy may be amended in a proper case.

While an execution is still in the hands of the officer, and before it has been returned, the officer may amend his entry of levy without leave of court;³⁹ but such an amendment cannot be made without leave of court by the officer after the expiration of his term of office,⁴⁰ nor can it be made by the officer's successor.⁴¹ After the return, notice to plaintiff and leave of court is usually necessary,⁴² but the court, on proper motion, will usually allow such amendment to be made nunc pro tunc,⁴³ and it has been held that an amendment may be made on the court's own motion.⁴⁴ For any vagueness, uncertainty, or defects of description in the levy, the proper remedy is to apply to the court for leave to have the levy amended.⁴⁵

f. Construction

General rules of construction apply to the construction of an entry of levy.

The rules and principles governing the construction of an ordinary deed of conveyance are applicable to the interpretation of a description contained in a levy.⁴⁶ The various indorsements on the writ are to be construed together.⁴⁷ Where the language is capable of two meanings, the construction most favorable to the purchaser will be

Particular entries held sufficient

Barr, 176 S.E. 681, 49 Ga.App. 831.

(2) The entry of levy on execution dated and signed by sheriff, which stated "I have this day executed the within fl. fa. by levying upon the within described property. Tenant in possession notified," was sufficient levy on land as property of defendant in execution under general judgment and execution.—Dwight v. g. Conclusiveness

An indorsement of levy is prima facie evidence of the levy therein recited, and cannot be contradicted by plaintiff or the officer.

An indorsement of a levy made on the writ of execution by the officer is prima facie evidence of the levy therein recited,⁵⁰ and cannot be contradicted by plaintiff or the officer.⁵¹ The levy is conclusive as to the right or interest in the property taken, and the sheriff cannot sell, nor can the purchaser acquire, any greater estate than that embraced in the levy.⁵²

§ 106. — Inventory and Appraisement

a. Inventory

b. Appraisement

a. Inventory

It is sometimes required that an officer levying on personal property shall make an inventory of the personalty levied on.

The rule is laid down in some of the cases that it is the duty of the officer levying on personal property of a judgment debtor to make an inventory of the goods and chattels levied on.⁵³ However, unless otherwise provided by statute,⁵⁴ the failure of the officer to make an inventory of the goods levied on will not invalidate the levy, but will only render the officer liable for any damages resulting from his failure to perform his duty.⁵⁵ An officer who has levied on a sealed parcel or locked box may open the parcel or box to inventory the contents.⁵⁶

Where part of property is exempt. The rule has been laid down that in levying on property of a judgment debtor, of which a certain amount is exempt by statute, failure to make the inventory required by statute, and to allow the judgment debtor to select from the property the amount so exempted, will invalidate the levy;⁵⁷ but where none of the property levied on is included in the statutory exemption a failure of the officer to make an inventory will not invalidate the levy.⁵⁸

b. Appraisement

- (2) Waiver
- (3) Notice

- (5) Proceedings of appraisers
- (6) Setting aside appraisement
- (7) Second appraisement

(1) In General

Where the statute so requires, an appraisement of the property levied on must be made after the levy and before sale.

In some states, statutes provide for an appraisement of the property levied on, after the levy and before sale. The purpose of such appraisement is to prevent a sale for an amount out of proportion to the real value of the property levied on,⁵⁹ to protect the debtor's right of redemption,⁶⁰ and to inform the officer as to the sufficiency of the property levied on to satisfy the judgment.⁶¹

Real property. No appraisement of real estate sold on execution is necessary,⁶² except in those

62. In Kansas

(1) Under the statutes as they existed prior to 1893, an appraisement of realty sold on execution was necessary.—Lemen v. Kansas Flour Mills Co., supra—23 C.J. p 459 note 53.

states where the statute requires it, in which case of course an appraisal is necessary,⁶³ unless where, pursuant to statute, judgment is rendered to be executed without any relief from appraisal laws;⁶⁴ and it is generally held that a sale without appraisal, where the statute requires an appraisal, is void, unless the judgment under which the execution issues so directs.⁶⁵ Under some statutes, however, real estate which the debtor has conveyed or caused to be conveyed, with intent to defraud his creditors, may be sold under execution without an appraisal, although the original judgment and execution did not so provide.⁶⁶

In some jurisdictions an appraisal of the rental value of real estate levied on is necessary. Thus under the statutes in Pennsylvania it is generally the duty of the sheriff after levying on any real estate to summon an inquest of six men for the purpose of ascertaining whether the rents and profits of such estate, beyond all reprises, will be sufficient to satisfy, within seven years, the judgment on which the execution is issued;⁶⁷ and a sale without an inquisition and condemnation, when required by statute, is voidable unless the record shows a waiver of the right of inquisition,⁶⁸ although it has been held that if defendant does not object to the sale he is estopped from alleging a want of inquisition as against a bona fide purchaser.⁶⁹ Where an appraisal or inquisition is required, it must be had, even though the land is mortgaged,⁷⁰ or is held adversely.⁷¹

Personal property. In some states, by force of statute, personal property levied on and advertised for sale on execution must be duly appraised before sale.⁷²

(2) But since the repeal in 1893 of the statutory requirement of appraisal no appraisal is necessary in the case of land sold under an ordinary execution.—Lemen v. Kansas Flour Mills Co., supra—23 C.J. p 459 note 53.

(3) Under a statute so providing, however, an appraisal is required where a writ is issued directing the sale of property previously taken in execution and requiring the officer to make a further levy if that already taken is, in his opinion, insufficient to satisfy the judgment.—Lemen v. Kansas Flour Mills Co., supra

(4) But this statute applies only to writs of the character therein described and not to ordinary executions.—Lemen v. Kansas Flour Mills Co., supra.

(5) Certain provisions of the earlier statutes relating to appraisal of real estate which were not repealed became inoperative because of the repeal in 1893 of the section requiring such appraisal, and their reenactment without change in the course of subsequent revisions of the code and the general statutes did not change their status.—Lemen v. Kansas Flour Mills Co., supra.

Property partially exempt

The sheriff must make an appraisal within a reasonable time where he levies on personal property of a class or species which is exempt from execution to a certain amount or value.—Tullis v. Orthwein, 5 Minn. 377.

What law governs. The rule seems to be well settled in some states that the statute in force at the date of a contract on which judgment has been rendered will govern as to the necessity and method of appraisal of property levied on under execution issued on such judgment;⁷³ but where it does not appear when the contract on which a judgment is obtained was made the appraisal law in force at the date of the rendition of such judgment must control.⁷⁴ If the contract was executed and is to be performed out of the state, the law in force at the date of the judgment will govern.⁷⁵

(2) Waiver

Generally a debtor may waive his right to an appraisal.

As a general rule, the judgment debtor, for whose benefit appraisal clauses are included in statutes prescribing the mode of execution, may at his option legally waive the right of having his property appraised before sale under the execution,⁷⁶ although there is authority to the contrary.⁷⁷

How evidenced. The judgment debtor's exercise of the waiver of his right to have his property appraised may be evidenced by his expressly authorizing it in writing, and it is frequently incorporated in the contract by which the debt on which the judgment is based is created,⁷⁸ or constructively by his acquiescence in the sale of the property by the officer, of which he has full notice, the latter on the ground of estoppel.⁷⁹

(3) Notice

A judgment debtor is entitled to reasonable notice to choose appraisers.

Wherever the statute makes appraisal a prerequisite to a valid sale of property levied on under execution, the judgment debtor is entitled to reasonable notice to choose an appraiser or appraisers, as the statute may direct;⁸⁰ and a failure to give such notice is fatal to the levy,⁸¹ unless the circumstances are such as to justify the officer in dispensing with the notice,⁸² as where the debtor himself appoints an appraiser.⁸³ Such notice should be served on defendant personally, if within the jurisdiction or county,⁸⁴ otherwise on his agent or tenant,⁸⁵ or be left at his last and usual place of abode;⁸⁶ it need not be served on one to whom defendant has sold the land.⁸⁷ The notice must be given a reasonable time before the appraisal.⁸⁸

Appraisers must be selected in the manner prescribed by statute.⁸⁹

The number of appraisers appointed depends on the terms of the statute in the particular jurisdiction, the usual number being three.⁹⁰

Different parcels of land. Where separate and distinct parcels of real estate are seized to satisfy an execution, a different set of appraisers may be chosen to appraise each separate parcel.⁹¹

(b) Qualifications

Each appraiser must possess the qualifications prescribed by statute.

It is essential to the validity of an appraisal that each appraiser possess the statutory qualifications,⁹² which cannot be waived even by the consent of the parties.⁹³ Unless forbidden by statute, an infant may be an appraiser.⁹⁴

Freeholders or householders. One of the qualifications usually required by statute is that the appraiser shall be a freeholder or householder of the county or town in which the property to be appraised is situated.⁹⁵

Effect of interest. The statutes enumerating the qualifications of the appraiser require that he shall be impartial and disinterested,⁹⁶ and as a rule the officer or justice who appoints the appraisers is the sole judge of their disinterestedness;⁹⁷ but it has been held that it is no disqualification on the ground of interest, that an appraiser is the deputy of the sheriff executing the writ,⁹⁸ or is the brother-in-law of the officer who appoints him;⁹⁹ and under some practice the appraisal may be made by the sheriff himself.¹ The ground most frequently urged against the eligibility of an appraiser on account of interest is his relationship to one of the parties to the suit which may be so close as to disqualify him² or may be so remote as to be no disqualification.³

(c) By Whom Chosen

Appraisers should be chosen by the person or persons designated by statute.

Appraisers should be chosen by the person or persons designated by statute.⁴ Under most statutes one of the appraisers is selected by the judgment creditor, and another by the judgment debtor, and the third appraiser is selected by the officer holding the writ,⁵ or by the other two appraisers, if they can agree;⁶ but under other statutes the power to appoint all the appraisers is in the officer.⁷ The appraiser which each party to the action is entitled to select may likewise be chosen by a duly authorized agent of such party.⁸

In case of joint debtors. Where execution issues against joint debtors, and the same is levied on their joint property, the selection of one appraiser may be made by either of such debtors;⁹ but where the execution is levied on the property of only one of several joint debtors, the appraiser must be selected by such debtor, and a selection by the other debtor, without the concurrence of the debtor whose property has been levied on, is void.¹⁰

Where debtor is absent from jurisdiction. Under most statutes where the judgment debtor is absent from, or resides out of, the state at the time of the levy, the levying officer is authorized to select an appraiser for him.¹¹

Neglect or refusal to make selection. Where the judgment debtor, after due notice, neglects or refuses to exercise his right of selection, the officer making the levy is generally authorized to select an appraiser for him.¹²

(d) Oath

Before proceeding to the performance of their duties, it is necessary that the appraisers take the oath of office prescribed by statute.

It is necessary for the appraisers, after being duly appointed, to take the oath of office prescribed by statute before proceeding to the performance of their duties.¹³ Under some statutes an appraiser, if he has conscientious scruples against taking an oath, may make an affirmation instead.¹⁴ The statutes usually authorize the administration of the oath by the officer making the levy or by a magistrate or justice of the peace,¹⁵ but notwithstanding such a statute it seems that the oath may be administered by any officer authorized to administer oaths in general.¹⁶ Under the statutes in some jurisdictions, however, the oath must be administered by a justice of the peace in the county where the property to be appraised is situated.¹⁷

(5) Proceedings of Appraisers

- (a) In general
- (b) Deductions for encumbrances
- (c) Certificate of appraisalment

(a) In General

The proceedings of appraisers depend mainly on the terms of the statutes in the different jurisdictions which must be observed.

The proceedings of appraisers depend mainly on the terms of the statutes in the different jurisdictions, which must be observed.¹⁸ After the appraisers have duly qualified, it is usually their duty to view or examine the property to be appraised so as to enable them to form an intelligent and just estimate of its value,¹⁹ although it has been held not necessary that the appraisers should actually go to the property and inspect it if they can make a proper appraisalment without doing so.²⁰ Where the appraisers have no personal knowledge as to the value of the property, it is their duty to hear testimony with respect to its value.²¹ Under some statutes both real and personal property are appraised in the same manner.²² In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that the appraisalment was properly made.²³

Property of joint debtors. Where an execution against several debtors is levied on land of which they are severally seized, the land of each debtor must be separately appraised;²⁴ but where an execution is levied on the property of two joint debtors held by them in common, it is not necessary to appraise each one's share separately.²⁵

Several parcels of land. Where several parcels of land belonging to the judgment debtor are levied on under execution, they may be appraised either severally or jointly.²⁶

Entire interest of judgment debtor. The appraisalment should embrace the entire interest of defendant in the property levied on, and the appraisers should ascertain the value of the interest set off in order that the debtor may redeem.²⁷

Time. Generally the appraisalment need not be made on the day of the execution sale but it may be made prior thereto.²⁸

Agreement of appraisers. In some jurisdictions the rule is laid down that, in order to constitute a valid appraisal, all of the appraisers must agree as to the value of the property;²⁹ but in other jurisdictions, where all of the appraisers act, a concurrence of two of the three appraisers may be sufficient.³⁰

Approval of court. Under some statutes the appraisers' valuation of the property is subject to the approval of the court.³¹

(b) Deductions for Encumbrances

In appraising property subject to prior encumbrances, it is the appraisers' duty to ascertain the amount of such encumbrances and deduct it from the appraised value of the property.

In making an appraisal on property subject to prior encumbrances, it is the duty of the appraisers to ascertain the amount of such encumbrances and to deduct such amount from the appraised value of the property,³² and under some statutes it is the duty of the county or city officers to certify the amount and character of all liens, in their offices, on the property.³³ Where an execution against the owner of an equity of redemption is levied on the land, it should appear from the return that the appraisers excluded the mortgage from their consideration in making the appraisal,³⁴ but the validity of the levy is not affected if the creditor chooses to have it made without such deduction.³⁵ An execution creditor levying on an equity of redemption in real estate is bound by the action of the appraisers as to the amount and validity of a prior encumbrance and is estopped from afterward showing that such encumbrance is less than the valuation of the appraisers, or founded on a usurious contract.³⁶

Contingent lien. The better rule seems to be that in levying an execution on land, the appraisers may deduct from the appraised value of the property a contingent lien on it, such as the encumbrance of the inchoate right of the judgment debtor's wife to dower.³⁷

Excessive allowance. Where, in the appraisal of property, an allowance is made for an encumbrance on, or estate in, the property which does not exist, the levy is invalid.³⁸ Likewise, where there is a valid and subsisting encumbrance on the property, but such encumbrance is materially overestimated by the appraisers, the levy is invalid.³⁹

(c) Certificate of Appraisal

After an appraisal has been made it is generally the duty of the appraisers to make out and sign a certificate of appraisal which is to be filed with the clerk of the proper court.

After the duly appointed appraisers have completed the appraisal of the property taken under execution, the statutes usually require them to make out and sign a certificate of appraisal, describing the property so appraised, the interest of the debtor therein, and the value thereof, stating also the value of, and making proper deductions for, encumbrances, and that they deliver such certificate to the officer making the levy,⁴⁰ and that

Sufficiency of certificate

An appraisal showing the total valuation of an entire tract of land sufficiently shows that the undivided one-half interest therein levied on is valued at one half the value plac-

such certificate be returned and filed with the clerk of the proper court.⁴¹ Where a verified copy of a last inventory and appraisal satisfactorily appears to be exact, it may be substituted for the original.⁴² While the general rule is that the certificate of appraisal should be signed by all the appraisers, yet it has been held that, where such certificate or the return of the officer shows that all of the duly appointed appraisers acted as such, the levy is not invalidated by the failure of one of the appraisers to sign the certificate.⁴³

Amendment. The certificate of appraisal may be amended by the appraisers as of right, where the rights of third parties acquired bona fide and without notice will not be impaired.⁴⁴

(6) Setting Aside Appraisal

An appraisal made by duly qualified appraisers acting in accordance with statutory requirements will not be set aside except for fraud or mistake, other than mere error of judgment.

Where an appraisal of property has been made by duly qualified appraisers acting in accordance with statutory requirements, such appraisal will not be set aside except for fraud or mistake, other than mere error of judgment, on the part of the appraisers.⁴⁵ Objections to the appraisal must be made before the sale.⁴⁶ If an appraisal was wrongfully allowed, the remedy of the creditor is to move to set it aside.⁴⁷

(7) Second Appraisal

The court may order a new appraisal where an appraisal has been set aside or where the property remains unsold for want of bidders.

It is proper for the court to enter an order for a new appraisal where an appraisal has been set aside in consequence of irregularity or fraud,⁴⁸ or, under some statutes, where the property remains unsold for want of bidders.⁴⁹ Where, however, the sale is set aside for any other reason, such as inadequacy of price, no new appraisal is necessary.⁵⁰ Where there are two levies on the same land, and the land is separately appraised in both cases at a like sum, a new appraisal at a less sum under the first levy does not affect the appraisal under the other levy.⁵¹

(8) Compensation of Appraisers

The compensation of appraisers is governed by statute.

a. In General

It is the officer's duty to levy on property sufficient to satisfy the execution and all proper fees and costs.

It is the duty of the officer to levy on property sufficient to satisfy the execution and all proper fees and costs.⁵³ A certain amount of discretion is left to the officer as to the quantity of property necessary to be taken, depending to some extent on the facts and circumstances of the particular case,⁵⁴ and taking into consideration the fact that there are prior liens, if any, on the property;⁵⁵ but it is his duty to take property sufficient to satisfy the execution, allowing for reasonable and probable depreciation of such property at a forced sale, although he should not make the levy so unreasonable and excessive as to bear on its face the appearance of oppression and unnecessary rigor.⁵⁶ If the sheriff honestly thinks that the debtor's property is not sufficient in value to pay the costs of levying on and selling it, he may refuse to levy and may return the writ unsatisfied.⁵⁷

A direction from plaintiff to make a part only of the execution is one which plaintiff has the right to make, and it must be obeyed by the sheriff.⁵⁸

Interest. In the absence of statute to the contrary, where an execution is issued in any action, except in debt for a penalty, the officer is not authorized to levy for interest which has accrued since the rendition of the judgment, but only for the amount of the execution.⁵⁹

b. Excessive Levy

The officer should levy on only so much of the debtor's property as is sufficient to answer the exigency of the writ.

The officer should levy on only so much of defendant's property as is sufficient to answer the exigency of the writ, and should not levy on all of the debtor's property when a portion thereof will be sufficient,⁶⁰ unless it is not divisible.⁶¹ It is difficult to lay down any general rule as to what amounts to an excessive levy, and the question must usually be determined by the circumstances of the particular case under consideration; but where the property levied on is of substantially greater value than the amount of the execution, the fees of the officer, and other expenses of the levy, such levy will be regarded as excessive.⁶² In determining whether a levy is excessive it is proper to consider the quality, quantity, and nature of the property levied on, the prevalent prices thereof,⁶³ the encumbrances, if any, thereon,⁶⁴ and the general conditions prevailing at the time;⁶⁵ but the fact that the officer holds other writs, not levied, cannot be considered.⁶⁶ A levy is not excessive, of course, where the sale is insufficient to satisfy the execution.⁶⁷

When a judgment is in rem against a described piece of property, the defense of excessive levy

does not lie;⁶⁸ and it has been held that a levy on land cannot be open to the objection that it is excessive, because, as has been said, the mere levy and advertisement do no harm, as the possession of land is not disturbed by the levy; but where the sheriff undertakes to sell land, it is his duty to sell no more than is necessary.⁶⁹

Remedy. As a general rule an affidavit of illegality is not a remedy for an excessive levy, see § 148 infra, but the proper remedy is by motion to the court from which the writ issued, and before sale, to set the levy aside⁷⁰ as to the excess.⁷¹ The burden of proving excessiveness is on the party raising the objection.⁷² An excessive levy may be cured by the judgment creditor releasing part of the property from the levy.⁷³

Waiver or estoppel. Where the judgment debtor acquiesces in the sale of his property under execution and fails to make objection to the same, on the ground of excessive levy, for a considerable period of time, where no fraud is shown in the transaction, such delay on his part will be held to be a waiver of the objection.⁷⁴ So, if the debtor points out an entire tract of land, and not a part of it, to be levied on and sold, and it is purchased at the sale by a stranger, the debtor is estopped from impeaching the act of the officer or the title of the purchaser on the ground that the levy is excessive.⁷⁵

Effect. The rule has been broadly laid down in a number of cases that an excessive levy will not invalidate the levy, and that until it is set aside it is valid;⁷⁶ but in some jurisdictions it is held that if the levy is entirely out of proportion to the debt, it is void⁷⁷ and, as appears in § 299 c infra, the purchaser acquires no title thereunder.

§ 108. — Objections to Irregularities and Waiver Thereof

- a. In general
- b. Who may object
- c. Waiver and estoppel

a. In General

The court should endeavor to sustain a levy as against minute or trivial exceptions.

Justice as well as general convenience demands that the court be astute in its endeavor to sustain a levy as against minute and trivial exceptions.⁷⁸

b. Who May Object

Generally only such persons as are adversely affected by irregularities in levying an execution can take advantage thereof.

The general rule is that as to irregularities in levying an execution, such as failure to comply with statutory requirements, the judgment debtor alone can object, third persons not being competent to urge such objection.⁷⁹ Plaintiff cannot complain,

In Louisiana

(1) Under statutes so providing, a judgment debtor asserting excessiveness of levy may, on application to the court, demand an appraisal of the property levied on, and if the judge finds, by the appraisal made, that more property was taken than necessary to satisfy the judgment, he must reduce the seizure to such an amount only as will be sufficient for this purpose.—Auto Painting & Repairing Co. v. Ware, App., 159 So. 749.

(2) Under these statutes a reduction of the seizure is not necessarily required merely because the property seized has been appraised in excess of the amount of the judgment, a reduction being required only where the judge in his sound discretion finds that more property has been seized than is necessary to "satisfy" the judgment.—Auto Painting & Repairing Co. v. c. Waiver and Estoppel

Defects and irregularities in the manner of levying may be waived expressly, or waiver or estoppel may arise constructively by the acts of the party.

Defects and irregularities in the manner of levying may be waived expressly,⁸³ or waiver or estoppel may arise constructively by the acts of the party,⁸⁴ as by consent,⁸⁵ directions to the officer,⁸⁶ failure to oppose the sale,⁸⁷ furnishing the officer with a description of the property and executing a forthcoming bond,⁸⁸ giving a claim bond,⁸⁹ or by failure to raise the objection within the period prescribed by statute⁹⁰ or at the earliest opportunity,⁹¹ or in the proper court and by the approved procedure,⁹² but estoppel does not apply to support a levy which is illegal and void.⁹³

§ 109. Quashing or Setting Aside Levy

a. In general

b. Grounds

a. In General

The court out of which the writ issued has jurisdiction to quash the levy; the proceeding is usually by motion to such court, and notice must be given to all necessary parties.

The court out of which the writ issued, as between the parties thereto, has the power to set aside the levy for any irregularity appearing therein,⁹⁴ especially where the execution creditor consents thereto.⁹⁵ A court of coordinate authority has no jurisdiction to quash such levy;⁹⁶ nor can the clerk of the court vacate a levy.⁹⁷

In modern practice the writ of audita querela which formerly was resorted to has been superseded almost entirely by a motion to quash or vacate the levy⁹⁸ where such course will furnish adequate relief.⁹⁹ In some jurisdictions a proceeding by affidavit of illegality is afforded as merely a cumulative remedy,¹ and in other jurisdictions special proceedings are provided by statute, such as by petition to the supreme court.²

Parties; notice. On a motion to quash a levy, all necessary parties must be before the court.³ Ordinarily the motion cannot be made by a stranger to the record.⁴

sons interested in or claiming under the writ, since they are entitled to be heard in opposition to the motion.⁵ However, notice need not be given to the sheriff, especially where the levy is on real property.⁶

Matters to be determined. On a motion to quash the levy the court cannot determine whether the property levied on was real or personal property.⁷ However, where the court sustains such a motion, it may determine the disposition of funds paid into court pending the proceeding.⁸

Effect of quashing levy. Where under proper proceedings the levy has been quashed or vacated, the parties stand in the same situation as if no levy had been made, and the sheriff cannot proceed to a sale of the property under such levy.⁹

Vacation of order quashing levy. An order quashing a levy will be vacated when shown to have been improvidently made.¹⁰

b. Grounds

A motion to quash the levy may be predicated on the omission of an essential requirement or on a lack of authority in the levying officer; but it is not a proper method of trying title to the property.

The omission of a requirement essential to the validity of the levy constitutes a ground for quashing it.¹¹ The motion may be made on the ground that the levying officer was not competent to act,¹² that he improperly failed to allow a party to designate the property to be levied on,¹³ that the levy was made prematurely,¹⁴ or that the judgment debtor had been discharged in bankruptcy.¹⁵ It is also a ground for setting aside the levy that it was made on property not subject to execution,¹⁶ such as property in custodia legis.¹⁷ Defects in the writ itself have been held ground for vacating a levy.¹⁸

It is not a ground for quashing the levy that the judgment erroneously gave plaintiff a special lien on the property,¹⁹ or that the judgment was rendered in a county other than the one in which defendant resides;²⁰ nor can a motion to quash, before the return day, question a return which is not then made or authorized to be made.²¹ Mere irregularities in the entry of a levy on the writ are usually not a ground for setting the levy aside.²²

Absence of evidence of levy. Since the execution and levy constitute the foundation of the proceeding, the motion must be overruled if there is no evidence thereof.²³

Title to property. A motion to quash the levy is not a proper proceeding to try the question of title to property, and the court will not set aside a levy on the motion of a party solely on the ground that the officer has seized property of a stranger

Failure to apprise debtor of exemption rights

In order to quash levy for failure to apprise judgment debtor of exemption rights, there must be showing that property levied on might have been held by debtor as exempt.—Poplar Bluff Trust Co. v. Bates, 31 S.W.2d 93, 224 Mo.App. 636.

Time of institution of proceedings

A motion to dismiss a levy, on the ground that the proceedings out of which the levy arose were instituted out of term time, is properly denied where it does not in fact appear that they were so instituted.—Dyal v. Watson, 162 S.E. 682, 174 Ga. 330.

to the writ,²⁴ or on the ground that the judgment debtor has no interest in the property levied on.²⁵ Neither will the court entertain a motion to vacate by a stranger who claims ownership of the property levied on, because the court will not in this manner determine conflicting titles to property; the stranger will be left to the legal methods of trying his right to the property, such as those provided by statute or by the common-law action of trespass.²⁶

Where a levy has been made on property which does not belong to defendant, and plaintiff has had to refund the money to the purchaser, or has become liable to the real owner, plaintiff may, on motion, have the levy vacated and the satisfaction of record removed.²⁷

§ 110. Operation and Effect of Levy

- a. In general
- b. Interest of debtor
- c. Interest of creditor

a. In General

Property levied on is in the custody of the law and the court by appropriate measures may restrain any interference.

Property levied on is in the custody of the law,²⁸ and it remains in such custody until it is withdrawn by order of a competent court;²⁹ the court may by attachment, punishment for contempt, and writ of restitution, maintain its jurisdiction against its own officers and other persons.³⁰ A levy on land not belonging to the debtor does not deprive the true owner of the right to bring trespass.³¹

The creation of a lien by the levy, and the extent thereof, is discussed infra §§ 123 et seq. The levy as constituting a satisfaction of the execution is considered infra § 336.

What law governs. The law of the state where a trust has been established determines the rights derived from the levy of an execution issued by a court of such state against the trust property.³²

b. Interest of Debtor

A levy does not, according to some authorities, divest the debtor of ownership, particularly in the case of realty.

According to some authorities a levy does not divest the debtor of his ownership in the property.³³ Thus it has been held that a levy on personal property does not change the title of the judgment debtor into a mere right of action, and that the title remains in him with a capacity of disposition in any manner which does not impair the lien of the execution,³⁴ at least until a sale is made which operates in law to transfer the judgment debtor's interest to another.³⁵ However, as shown infra § 114, there is authority that a levy on personalty vests title in the officer making the levy. A levy on the rights of plaintiff in a suit deprives him of subsequent control over such suit.³⁶

36. La.—Garlick v. Williams Medical & Surgical Inst., 61 So. 732, 132 La. 620.

The levy of an execution on real property of the judgment debtor does not of itself operate as a disseizin, nor does it deprive the judgment debtor of the power of transferring or selling the same, subject to any lien of the execution,³⁷ although it has been held otherwise as to a levy on an equity of redemption.³⁸

c. Interest of Creditor

The judgment creditor acquires no title to the property by reason of the levy and his interest in the property cannot exceed that which the debtor had.

The judgment creditor does not by virtue of the levy acquire title to the property seized,³⁹ but only an inchoate right to payment out of its avails by legal proceeding.⁴⁰ Any interest acquired by the creditor as a result of the levy is limited to the actual interest of the debtor⁴¹ at the time of the levy or of the attachment of the lien.⁴²

The levy on a debt due from a third person to the execution debtor gives the creditor a right to have such debt applied in payment of the claim of the execution creditor, and in effect makes such person trustee of the amount due from him to the execution debtor.⁴³

Interest in leased property. A judgment creditor who levies on leased property may obtain all rents subsequently accruing,⁴⁴ even though the lessee has given promissory notes to the debtor for such rents.⁴⁵

§ 111. Abandonment, Waiver, or Relinquishment of Levy

A levy may be abandoned, but the creditor or officer cannot release one levy and impose another at will.

Where a levy is made, the creditor or officer, as a general rule, has no power to release the levy and then levy on other property, unless with the consent of the debtor,⁴⁶ or on reasonable notice to him.⁴⁷ It has also been held that, where an execution has been levied, a claim interposed, and the papers returned to court, the officer has no right, except on leave of court, to withdraw the execution and make another levy,⁴⁸ but that before the papers have been returned into court, the creditor may have a new levy made on other property without an order of court for that purpose,⁴⁹ and that a levy may be dismissed while an issue is pending thereon.⁵⁰ A levy may be abandoned or relinquished where the property levied on does not belong to the debtor,⁵¹ or where the levy, for any other reason, is void.⁵²

Cyman, 281 N.W. 332, 285 Mich. 535.

Whether a levy has been abandoned or relinquished depends largely on the circumstances of the particular case,⁵³ and is ordinarily a question for the jury.⁵⁴

§ 112. Restoration of Levy

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 113. Custody and Care of Property in General

The levying officer is under a duty to retain custody of the property. If necessary, he may employ a watchman.

It is the duty of the officer making the levy to keep the property within his custody and control until sold or otherwise lawfully disposed of.⁵⁵ He must have and retain such supervision over and custody of the property as will enable him to retain and assert his power and control over it, so that it cannot be withdrawn or taken by another without his knowledge.⁵⁶

Putting a watchman or keeper in charge of property levied on is a sufficient precaution for its protection, unless violence is apprehended,⁵⁷ but the levy is not invalidated by a mere failure to place property levied on in charge of a watchman and to prevent the owners from resuming possession and control.⁵⁸

Retaking. If property levied on is removed by others, the officer may take possession wherever found and use all force necessary for that purpose.⁵⁹

§ 114. Title and Rights Acquired by Officer

- a. In general
- b. Actions by officer

a. In General

An officer by his levy acquires a special property in goods seized; he does not acquire title to realty or, according to some authorities, the right to possession thereof.

A levy on property of the judgment debtor vests in the officer making the levy a special property in the goods seized, and the right of possession thereof for the purpose of sale under such levy.⁶⁰ The officer, rather than the judgment creditor, has the right to raise questions as to the right of possession of the property seized.⁶¹ The special right of the officer ceases when the execution creditor is satisfied, that is, when the object of the levy is attained.⁶²

There is authority holding that the levy of an ex-

Acts constituting abandonment

(1) There is a failure to keep good a levy on goods in a store, thus letting in a chattel mortgage, made and recorded after the levy, but before such failure, where the articles are not inventoried and marked or removed, but remain in the store, the owner retains possession of the key, and the person placed in charge as keeper by the officer stays in another part of the city at night.—Smart v. Sosey, 193 P. 167, 49 Cal. App. 332.

The ex parte filing by defendant of schedule of exempt property, after levy of execution, does not divest levying officer of right of possession.—Kemp v. Price, 157 S.E. 117, 42 Ga.App. 655.

Concurrent possession with mortgagee

By statute the mortgagee and the officer levying may have concurrent possession of the mortgaged chattels, the officer retaining custody until the mortgagee's sale, and having a right to know the amount and conditions thereof; and when the mortgagee sells he can protect the rights of the officer as well as his own.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

execution on personalty of the debtor vests the title thereto and the right to possession thereof in the officer making the levy,⁶³ but, as pointed out supra § 110 b, there is also authority that the levy alone does not divest the debtor of ownership.

It has been held that the officer has no authority to thresh grain, in order to put it in the best condition for sale;⁶⁴ but that, where it is necessary for the preservation of the grain, it is his duty to thresh it.⁶⁵ The officer has no authority to work animals levied on, to pay the expense of keeping them.⁶⁶

A levy on real property gives the officer no title to the premises;⁶⁷ nor, according to some authorities, does it give him the right to possession thereof.⁶⁸ On the other hand, there is authority indicating that a levy on, or seizure of, realty gives the officer a right of possession,⁶⁹ and vests in him the right to receive the rents and profits of such property from the date of seizure.⁷⁰ It has also been held that an officer levying on a mortgagor's equity of redemption is entitled to take the property into his possession for the purpose of effecting a sale of the equity.⁷¹

b. Actions by Officer

The levying officer may maintain such actions as trespass, trover, or replevin against one who wrongfully interferes with his possession of the property.

The officer may maintain an action against one who unlawfully takes from his possession property levied on.⁷² An officer who has either actual possession of the property or the right to immediate possession may maintain an action of trespass against any person wrongfully disturbing him in such possession,⁷³ or an action of trover for its conversion;⁷⁴ but he cannot invoke a summary proceeding by attachment for contempt of court against another officer for taking the property under another writ subsequently issued.⁷⁵

As a general rule, where the officer has actual possession by virtue of the execution, it is sufficient to enable him to maintain trespass or trover without proving or producing the judgment;⁷⁶ but it has been held that, where he sues in trespass, on a mere constructive possession, for the benefit of plaintiff in the execution, he must prove the judgment, if required to do so, and that proving the execution alone is not sufficient.⁷⁷

Replevin. An officer who has seized chattels under valid process has such a special property therein as will authorize him to maintain replevin against one who takes them out of his possession or that of his custodian.⁷⁸ However, he has no such interest as will authorize him to maintain replevin where he has not yet levied on the property,⁷⁹ or where the levy is made on a void process,⁸⁰ or where the levy and execution have been set aside before the return day of the execution.⁸¹ An officer who seizes goods of a stranger to the suit acquires no such interest as will entitle him to maintain replevin against the true owner.⁸² on, the officer may leave it in the possession of a third person as his bailee.

It is not necessary for an officer levying on property of a judgment debtor to retain actual possession of such property himself; he may leave it in the possession of a third person as his bailee,⁸³ or, as pointed out supra § 97, may permit the debtor to retain possession. By so doing the officer does not relinquish possession, but merely selects an agent to retain possession in his behalf, and the property is regarded as still being in his custody.⁸⁴ A promise by a third person to hold property for the sheriff does not make such person the sheriff's agent where the promise is made before the sheriff has taken possession.⁸⁵

Form and contents of receipt. Where a receipt is given, it need not set forth in detail, or describe minutely and with particularity, the parties, court, and other facts appearing in full on the execution.⁸⁶ The officer cannot make any agreement with the custodian which would be at variance with the officer's duty as to the property,⁸⁷ and a promise in excess of the liability of the officer to the execution creditor is void, at least as to the excess.⁸⁸

b. Actions

- (1) By bailee or receiptor
- (2) Against bailee or receiptor

(1) By Bailee or Receiptor

The bailee or receiptor of goods levied on may, according to some authorities, maintain an action to recover the goods or for their conversion.

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁹ it has been held that the bailee or receiptor of goods levied on has such a special property in the goods as entitles him to maintain an action to recover the property or for its conversion.⁹⁰

It has also been held that defendant in execution, with whom the property is left after the levy, see supra § 97, is the mere servant or agent of the officer, and cannot sue for the conversion of, or injury to, the property seized.⁹¹

(2) Against Bailee or Receiptor

The levying officer has several remedies against a bailee for his failure to redeliver the property. The bailee may be estopped to raise certain defenses.

If the bailee or receiptor fails or refuses to deliver when delivery is due, as on demand, the officer may sue him to recover the property or for its conversion;⁹² or he may sue in assumpsit for the breach of the contract.⁹³ The officer's right of action is dependent on his liability over to some one else,⁹⁴ and hence if he has been discharged from such liability, he cannot maintain the action unless the discharge resulted from his payment of the liability.⁹⁵ The production of an execution in support of the officer's right of action may be dispensed with by proof of its loss.⁹⁶

Conditions precedent. Where a demand is necessary before bringing suit, the demand need not be made by the officer personally but may be made by any person properly authorized by him.⁹⁷ Under some statutes the demand need not be made within the lifetime of the execution.⁹⁸

Defenses. The receiptor is liable unless the property is destroyed by the act of God or the public enemy.⁹⁹ It is no defense that the sheriff made an excessive levy;¹ that the property was taken out of his possession by an officer, unless a legal right so to act is shown;² that the deputy sheriff transcended his powers, where ratified by the sheriff;³ that the bailee or receiptor offered to deliver the property, after the time when the officer could sell it;⁴ or that there were mistakes in the receipt as to the property, where they could not have misled the parties.⁵ It is no defense that the execution is satisfied since in such case the officer is liable to the execution debtor for a return of the property.⁶ The receipt cannot show that the property was of less value than the sum stipulated to be paid in case of its nondelivery.⁷

Although the fact that the property was not subject to execution is not necessarily a defense,⁸ the receipt may show that the goods are exempt and have been delivered to the execution debtor.⁹

Estoppel or waiver. The receipt is estopped from alleging the want of a sufficient legal judgment or execution,¹⁰ and from denying a delivery to him of the property as recited in the receipt.¹¹ Further, the receipt may be estopped to assert title in himself or a third person,¹² as where he conceals his ownership and suffers the goods to be seized as the property of the execution debtor.¹³

Where the receipt does not admit ownership in the execution debtor, and the receipt at the time asserts ownership in himself or the officer has knowledge of his claim, the receipt is not estopped from setting up his ownership in an action on the receipt.¹⁴ A lienholder does not waive his lien by signing an acknowledgment which states that he holds the property for the sheriff, where the acknowledgment contains an express reservation of his rights.¹⁵

§ 116. Delivery on Forthcoming or Delivery Bond

a. In general

b. Operation and effect of bond

a. In General

Under statutes property seized on execution may be delivered to the debtor on his furnishing a forthcoming or delivery bond.

A forthcoming or delivery bond, as the term is used herein, is a bond given for the security of the sheriff, conditioned to produce the property levied on when required,¹⁶ its object being to enable the debtor to retain in his possession the property levied on until the day of sale.¹⁷ These bonds are of statutory origin,¹⁸ and are to be distinguished from receipts for the delivery of the property to the officer on demand, see supra § 115, and from bonds given by third party claimant of the property seized, see infra §§ 176, 192-194.

The forthcoming bond, when given, is not binding until accepted by the officer,¹⁹ and is of no effect until the property is released by the officer;²⁰ and the fact that the officer attests the bond is not conclusive evidence that he has accepted it.²¹

The owner of personalty who has given a bond to obtain the redelivery of property levied on is not required to pay the costs, including the expense of keeping the property while it is under levy and in the officer's possession, as a condition precedent to obtaining possession from the officer.²²

Officer's rights and duties as to bond. Under some statutes it appears to be the duty of the officer to take a forthcoming or delivery bond and deliver the property where defendant so demands.²³ However, a statute authorizing a delivery bond when the property is left by the levying officer in the possession of the execution debtor, may be merely directory and remedial,²⁴ and although it is safer and better for the officer to take a bond,²⁵ it is a matter within his discretion,²⁶ and his fail-

Destruction of value by use

A bond should not be taken where continued use of the property would tend to wear it out and destroy its ure to do so does not affect the validity of the levy.²⁷

The officer has no right to take such a bond where, pursuant to statute, an execution is indorsed "No security of any kind to be taken."²⁸

Time for bond. The bond may be given and accepted after the return day of the writ.²⁹

Judgment or levy void. Since a forthcoming bond must be founded on a valid judgment and execution thereunder, such a bond, given under a void judgment or under a void levy of execution, is also void.³⁰

Exempt property. A bond extorted by an officer to compel the delivery of exempt property is void, unless the debtor waives his rights either by act or omission.³¹

b. Operation and Effect of Bond

The giving and acceptance of a forthcoming bond entitles the debtor to possession of the property. As a general rule, the bond does not destroy the lien of the execution and it may estop the obligors from questioning the validity of the writ or of the levy.

The giving and acceptance of a forthcoming bond entitles the debtor to the custody of the property,³² and relieves the officer from the obligation to keep the property.³³ It makes the debtor the agent of the levying officer.³⁴ Delivery of the property pursuant to the bond does not preclude the filing of a claim by a third person.³⁵

Debtor's right to refuse possession. After giving a bond the debtor may, nevertheless, refuse to take possession of the property.³⁶ Under such circumstances the levying officer continues in possession by virtue of the levy;³⁷ he does not hold as bailee or agent for defendant.³⁸

Extinguishment of levy, lien, or judgment. As a general rule, the giving of a forthcoming or delivery bond, and the consequent surrender of possession of the property, does not destroy the lien of the execution or render the original seizure a nullity.³⁹ In some jurisdictions, in construing statutes concerning forthcoming bonds, it has been held that such a bond is not a satisfaction of the execution, and on condition broken the judgment creditor may sue out a new execution on the judgment against defendant and the sureties on the bond, and the officer may levy again on the same property.⁴⁰ In other jurisdictions, however, the bond operates as a discharge of the levy and lien, or as a satisfaction of the original judgment, at least where forfeited by a failure to deliver the property, and the remedy thereafter is on the bond,⁴¹ unless relief is obtained in equity.⁴²

A forthcoming bond, without any, or with a fictitious, security, is absolutely void, and its forfeiture does not discharge the lien of the judgment or execution;⁴³ and the same rule applies where the bond is afterward quashed for any irregularity.⁴⁴ The forfeiture of a delivery bond taken without authority of law does not discharge the execution lien.⁴⁵ Where property is delivered on a void forthcoming bond, it cannot be retaken and sold under a venditioni exponas unless by consent.⁴⁶

Where one of two judgment debtors gives a bond which is forfeited, the other is not discharged from the original judgment if the obligors on the bond prove insolvent.—Garland v. Lynch, 1 Rob. 545, 40 Va. 545.

Transfer to third person

A voluntary surrender of the property by defendant to a third person, who has no valid right thereto, subsequent to the execution of the bond, does not defeat plaintiff's lien.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., 38 So. 783, 86 Miss. 509, 109 Am.S.R. 716.

of the writ⁴⁷ or of the levy,⁴⁸ or the fact of levy,⁴⁹ or to set up that the property was not subject to levy.⁵⁰ After receiving the property and getting the full benefit of the bond, the obligor is estopped from denying the validity of the bond.⁵¹

The estoppel does not extend, however, to the validity of the process⁵² or to the authority of the officer to make the levy,⁵³ and there is no estoppel to assert that the judgment and execution are void.⁵⁴ A judgment debtor who has obtained a release of property by means of a forthcoming bond does not thereby waive his right to seek the reduction of an excessive seizure.⁵⁵

§ 117. — Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency of Bonds

- a. In general
- b. Conditions as to redelivery
- c. Parties
- d. Motions to quash

a. In General

The forthcoming bond must substantially conform to statutory requirements, but a bond which fails to comply with the statutes may nevertheless be binding as a common-law obligation. Irregularities in the bond may be waived.

While the form and requisites of the forthcoming bond vary according to the provisions of different statutes, yet, since the proceeding is statutory, it is essential that the bond should substantially conform to the requirements of the statute by which it is authorized.⁵⁶ If the statute does not prescribe the form, the bond is not void for its failure to follow the words of the statute.⁵⁷ A bond, not good as a statutory bond, for failure to comply with some provision of the statute, may yet be good as a common-law obligation.⁵⁸ The officer's fee for taking the bond may be included in it.⁵⁹

The bond should recite the issuance and levy of the writ,⁶⁰ the name of the judgment debtor,⁶¹ and the amount for which the execution issued.⁶² Any material variance between the writ and the description thereof in the bond will be fatal to the bond,⁶³ but slight and unimportant variance will not be noticed.⁶⁴ A variance between the return and the bond is immaterial.⁶⁵

Description of property. The bond should describe the property levied on, and for the proper delivery of which it is conditioned.⁶⁶ It should specify the owner thereof,⁶⁷ and, in some jurisdictions, its value.⁶⁸

Seal. A seal is not necessary under statutes dispensing therewith,⁶⁹ and its absence is at most a mere irregularity.⁷⁰

Blanks in bond. A bond executed and delivered in blank as to any material part thereof is void;⁷¹ but the fact that a blank appears in part of the bond does not invalidate it, if the omission can be supplied by construction from another part thereof.⁷²

Bond covering two executions. In some jurisdictions it is proper to unite two executions against the same party in one forthcoming bond, provided the bond recites distinctly the amount of each execution.⁷³

Objections, waiver, and amendment. The obligors cannot object to the validity of the bond where the defect urged will not injure them, as where the penal sum is too small,⁷⁴ or where the officer has taken the bond without the sureties required by statute, and the judgment creditor has accepted it,⁷⁵ or where a bond executed by less than all the debtors has been accepted and they alone complain.⁷⁶ The execution defendant may waive defects in the bond.⁷⁷

After the execution of the bond, the court may allow an amendment to correct a clerical error patent on its face, and may permit the bond to be reformed so as to make it conform to the true and evident intention of the parties at the time of its execution.⁷⁸

b. Conditions as to Redelivery

The forthcoming bond must contain the conditions prescribed by statute relating to the redelivery of the property.

The forthcoming bond must contain the statutory conditions relating to the redelivery of the property.⁷⁹ Generally the bond should require the obligor to deliver the property to the officer at the time and place fixed for sale,⁸⁰ and in some jurisdictions the bond must be conditioned to deliver the property at the time of the sale thereof and not when demanded.⁸¹ The day fixed for delivery may be a day after the return day of the writ,⁸² and if the day of delivery is stated, it need not also be stated that that day is the day of sale;⁸³ failure to state the year for the delivery is not necessarily fatal.⁸⁴ A bond is not good as a statutory bond which provides for delivery on a day different from the day of sale fixed in the bond,⁸⁵ or for delivery on a day after the time prescribed by the statute,⁸⁶ or for delivery on a day already passed.⁸⁷ An impossible date for delivery, which may be corrected by reasonable intendment, does not invalidate the bond.⁸⁸ It is immaterial that there is not sufficient time stated in the condition, under the statute, between the levy and sale.⁸⁹

To whom delivered. It is not necessary to state to whom the property is to be delivered.⁹⁰

c. Parties

The forthcoming bond should be executed by, and made payable to, those persons designated by the governing statutes.

The question who may execute a forthcoming bond depends on the terms of the governing statute.⁹¹ Some statutes authorize only the person whose property is levied on to execute such bond,⁹² or, in case of his death, his executor or administrator.⁹³ When there are several defendants the better doctrine seems to be that one of them may execute such a bond even where his codefendants fail to unite with him;⁹⁴ and it has been held that, although it is irregular for the officer to allow the bond to be executed unless all the defendants join therein, yet the bond is valid and binding on the obligors, until it is quashed at the instance of the judgment creditor.⁹⁵

The names of the parties at whose instance the executions have issued need not be stated.⁹⁶ Unless required by statute, a surety is not necessary,⁹⁷ and the fact that the obligee is also a surety will not render the bond void.⁹⁸

To whom payable. To constitute a statutory bond, the provisions of the statute as to whom it must be payable must be strictly followed.⁹⁹ In most jurisdictions the statutes require the bond to be made payable to the judgment creditor;¹ but the fact that a bond is made payable to the wrong person will not prevent recovery on it as a common-law bond.² Where the name of the obligee is omitted, the bond is a covenant with the officer to whom it is delivered.³

A defective forthcoming bond may be attacked by motion to quash it, provided the motion is made at the proper time.

The proper mode of attacking a defective forthcoming bond is by a motion to quash it, which will usually be granted at the instance of the judgment creditor, provided it is made at the proper time,⁴ but only for inherent defects.⁵ In a proper case, the motion may be made by the obligors in the bond.⁶

In some jurisdictions a motion to quash must be made at the first term of court after the execution issues,⁷ and where a judgment quashing the bond is void by reason of its being granted after such term, it may be wholly disregarded, and execution may issue on the bond as though no such judgment had been made.⁸ It is not too late for one who is not a party to the bond to object, after such term, to the bond's operating to charge him.⁹

Motion to quash execution. A defect in the bond cannot be urged by motion to quash an execution issuing on it after forfeiture of the bond.¹⁰

§ 118. — Liabilities on Bonds

- a. In general
- b. Liability of sureties
- c. Defenses and excuses

a. In General

Liability on a forthcoming bond arises when the bond is breached.

To impose liability on a forthcoming bond, a breach of the bond is necessary,¹¹ and, where the execution of the bond is not denied, this is the only issue that may properly be raised in a suit thereon.¹²

As a general rule, the bond is forfeited by the failure to deliver the property at the time and place of sale,¹³ or on demand where the bond so reads,¹⁴ unless in the alternative, the obligor pays the whole amount due.¹⁵ A subsequent act of the obligors, such as a tender of the property after the day of sale,¹⁶ or a tender of other property as a substitute for that levied on, although of greater value,¹⁷ does not relieve them from the previous forfeiture.

b. Liability of Sureties

Sureties on a forthcoming bond are liable on default by the principal unless they are discharged from responsibility or obtain relief in equity.

Before the sureties on a forthcoming bond may be held liable, it must be shown that the principal has breached the bond.¹⁸

A surety is not released by the return of a fieri facias against the principal before the return day of the writ, unless he is shown to have been injured thereby;¹⁹ nor is he released by a voluntary surrender of the property by defendant to a third person, who has no right thereto, subsequent to the execution of the bond.²⁰ A judgment against one surety on a forthcoming bond does not, prior to satisfaction thereof, bar an action against another surety on the bond.²¹ The fact that plaintiff in fieri facias instituted suit on one forthcoming bond does not necessarily bar an action by him against the sureties on a second bond subsequently issued.²²

Delay in proceeding on bond. An unreasonable delay on the part of the judgment creditor in suing out execution on a forthcoming bond after it has been forfeited may discharge the sureties.²³ A reasonable delay in proceeding on the forthcoming bond will not release the sureties, especially where it is not shown that they were damaged thereby.²⁴

Extent of liability. Sureties cannot be held for another or different amount than the principal,²⁵ and under some statutes they are not responsible for more than the value of the property specified in the bond.²⁶

Relief in equity. In some cases equity has undertaken to relieve sureties on a forfeited bond, as where the surety was prevented by accident or fraud from delivering the property at the time appointed;²⁷ or where the obligee in the bond was a co-surety and the principal was insolvent,²⁸ or where the signature appearing on the bond was unauthorized,²⁹ unless the judgment creditor was not a party to the fraud.³⁰

On the other hand, the doctrine is well settled that a court of equity will not grant relief to sureties on the ground of an irregularity in the judgment or levy on which the bond was founded,³¹ unless the irregularity is such as to prevent the bond from being obligatory.³²

c. Defenses and Excuses

Liability on forthcoming bond may be avoided, for example, where its conditions have not been wrongfully breached, or, if breached, no damage resulted.

Any proper defense relating to the performance of the condition of the forthcoming bond may be set up in avoidance of liability.³³

Defects in, or reversal of judgment. Defects in the original judgment do not constitute a defense,³⁴ unless they are such as to render the judgment void.³⁵

The reversal of the judgment on which the forthcoming bond was given avoids the bond and execution issued thereon, without a motion to quash.³⁶

Property not subject to levy. The failure to produce exempt property has been held not to impose liability for breach of the bond.³⁷ It is also a good

18. Failure to deliver property, etc.

Where the condition of the bond is that the principal shall deliver the property or pay the amount of the bond when called on to do so, the surety is not liable without proof that the principal has breached the bond.—Cutrer v. Smith, La.App., 142 So. 170.

Suit on second bond held barred

Where a fieri facias is levied and a forthcoming bond with security given, and pending a claim proceeding plaintiff in fieri facias withdraws the original fieri facias and levies on additional property of defendant, a verdict for defendants in a suit on second forthcoming bond given with new sureties would be authorized, where plaintiff in a suit on the first bond compromised with the solvent surety, as that amounted to a satisfaction of the fieri facias as to the sureties in the second bond, in view of governing statutes.—Garrett v. Combs, 104 S.E. 251, 25 Ga.App. 274.

defense that the property was levied on without authority because the levy should have been confined to property previously attached.³⁸ On the other hand, it has been held to be no defense that the property for which the bond was given was not the property of the execution debtor.³⁹

Absence of damage. There can be no recovery for breach of the bond where no damage results from such breach,⁴⁰ as where the property has been damaged while in the possession of the obligor in the bond, but the property even in its depreciated condition is worth more than enough to satisfy plaintiff's demand.⁴¹

Delivery of part of property. Defendant must account for his failure to redeliver all the property levied on.⁴² The officer may refuse to receive a partial delivery and hold the obligor for the full amount of the bond.⁴³ Where only part of the property for which the forthcoming bond is executed is delivered according to the terms of the bond, the obligors therein are at the most only released pro tanto, and will remain liable for the remainder of the property.⁴⁴

Injunction. A temporary injunction procured by the obligor in the bond does not excuse performance,⁴⁵ but it is otherwise where such injunction is procured by a third person before the day for delivery.⁴⁶ It is no defense that the time for a motion for rehearing of an appeal from a temporary restraining order against the sale has not passed.⁴⁷

Other defenses and excuses. Various other defenses or excuses have been held to be good,⁴⁸ of which, among others, are the impossibility of delivering the property notwithstanding bona fide efforts to do so,⁴⁹ as where the property has been taken out of the possession or control of the obligor by seizure under prior writs or liens,⁵⁰ or under a paramount title,⁵¹ or pursuant to valid judicial proceedings;⁵² failure of the officer to have the property appraised as required by statute;⁵³ that the issue on an affidavit of illegality was decided in favor of the obligor in the bond;⁵⁴ or, where the bond does not recite the judgment, that there was no judgment or that it had been paid.⁵⁵

Various other defenses or excuses have been held not to be good,⁵⁶ of which, among others, are the suing out of an alias writ, after forfeiture of the bond, and a levy on the same property;⁵⁷ the mere absence of the officer at the time and place for delivery of the property;⁵⁸ the illegality of the levy;⁵⁹ fraudulent representations of the officer relating to the bond,⁶⁰ or made by the obligor to a surety in the presence of the officer;⁶¹ the actual and adjudged insolvency of the judgment debtor, and consequent restriction of the property by the trustee in bankruptcy;⁶² the filing of a claim by a third party for the property after the execution of the bond;⁶³ an agreement between the debtor and the officer, varying the effect of the bond, as prescribed by statute;⁶⁴ possession by the sheriff of executions su-

§ 119. — Actions on Bonds or Summary Judgment

- a. Actions on bonds
- b. Summary judgment

a. Actions on Bonds

The levying officer may sue on the forthcoming bond, although in some jurisdictions the execution creditor may also sue. The general rules of pleading, evidence, and damages ordinarily are applicable.

Statutes authorizing the issuance of execution against the obligors in a forfeited forthcoming bond are generally considered to afford a cumulative remedy, and not to preclude an action on the bond.⁷² Debt is a proper form of action.⁷³

Conditions precedent. Generally no demand for delivery is necessary,⁷⁴ at least unless the surrender is desired before the day specified in the bond.⁷⁵ In some jurisdictions a condition precedent to the action is a notice to the obligors of the time and place of sale of the property for which the bond was given,⁷⁶ but a legal advertisement of such sale has been held to be sufficient notice or demand.⁷⁷

Unless required by statute, it is not a condition precedent that the bond be indorsed "forfeited";⁷⁸ and clauses in statutes requiring the forfeiture of such bond to be indorsed on it have been held to be merely directory.⁷⁹

Persons entitled to sue and parties. Generally the levying officer may sue in his own name.⁸⁰ He may, in his petition, designate the action as being brought for the use of the execution creditor,⁸¹ even where the bond does not comply with the statute because made payable to the officer instead of to the execution creditor.⁸² The rule has been laid down that the officer has no right of action on the bond until he has been held liable to the execution creditor for the amount of the property, and then only to the amount of his actual damage.⁸³ It has been held that the successor in office of the sheriff cannot sue on the bond.⁸⁴ An action in the name of the officer without his consent will be dismissed unless indemnity against costs is given to him.⁸⁵ In some states the execution creditor may sue.⁸⁶

Where a bond is executed to secure a release of property seized on several executions having equal priority, it is proper, on breach of the condition, to join the several judgment creditors as parties plaintiff in an action on the bond.⁸⁷ Where

Agreement as to constructive possession

It is no defense that the officer agreed with the obligors that it should be considered that he still had the constructive possession of the property levied on, so as to preclude the necessity of a delivery by the obligors.—Pratt v. Cook, 62 P. 438, 10 Kan.App. 144.

Effect of inability to produce property

Where defendant cannot produce the property in compliance with the bond because the property has disappeared or has been consumed, it is not necessary, in order to establish a breach, to advertise the property for sale or to make a demand on defendant for the property.—Herrington v. the obligation is joint and severable, the surety may be sued alone without joining the principal.⁸⁸

Pleading. General rules relating to pleadings usually apply in actions on forthcoming bonds.⁸⁹ The declaration, petition, or complaint should set out the condition of the bond and allege the facts which show a breach of such condition,⁹⁰ such as a failure to deliver the property on the day specified.⁹¹ The recovery of judgment and the issuance of execution thereunder, showing that the officer had authority to seize the property and take the bond, should be pleaded;⁹² but it is not necessary to set out the execution or attach it as an exhibit,⁹³ nor is it necessary to plead its validity.⁹⁴ The consideration for the bond need not be pleaded where a statute provides that a contract in writing imports a consideration.⁹⁵ Omission to aver the value of the property does not make the pleading subject to a general demurrer,⁹⁶ and the fact that the measure of damages is incorrectly stated does not render the pleading bad on special demurrer.⁹⁷

A plea in an action of debt that defendants have always been and still are ready to deliver the goods according to the condition of the bond is bad;⁹⁸ but a plea of payment is good,⁹⁹ as is also a plea that defendant delivered the property on the day, at the place, and to the officer named in the condition of the bond.¹ A plea of nul tiel record has been held demurrable.²

Defenses to actions on the bond are treated supra § 118 c.

Presumptions and burden of proof. The usual rules as to presumptions³ and burden of proof⁴ are applicable in actions on forthcoming bonds.

Plaintiff has the burden of proving that the property involved belonged to the debtor.⁵ An obligor on the bond claiming that the property was destroyed by an act of God has the burden of so proving.⁶ A defendant who has permitted claimant to seize the property without judicial proceedings has the burden of showing that such claim was paramount to the lien of the levy, and that he could not have resisted legal proceedings by claimant.⁷

Admissibility of evidence. General rules governing the admissibility of evidence ordinarily apply in actions on forthcoming bonds.⁸ The forthcoming bond itself is admissible.⁹ The writ on which the levy in the original case was made is admissible,¹⁰ and, indeed, has been considered indispensable.¹¹ Evidence of the return of the writ nulla bona is admissible to show a breach of the bond.¹²

Weight and sufficiency of evidence. General rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence ordinarily apply in actions on forthcoming bonds.¹³ Proof of a failure to deliver the property for the production of which the bond was given, at the time and place fixed in the advertisement of the sale, makes a prima facie case.¹⁴ Proof of the return of the writ nulla bona has been held to be sufficient evidence of a breach of the bond.¹⁵ The taking of a second bond for delivery at an ad-

journe sale is conclusive proof of the performance of the condition of the first bond.¹⁶

Trial and judgment. Where it appears without dispute that the conditions of a forthcoming bond have been breached, it is not error to direct a verdict against defendant on all issues except the amount of damages.¹⁷

A judgment for costs obtained against the sureties on a forthcoming bond cannot be attacked collaterally in a subsequent suit brought by the principal debtor who has reimbursed the sureties.¹⁸

Damages. The amount of recovery is generally fixed by statute; in most jurisdictions, both by statute and independent thereof, the measure of recovery is the unpaid amount of the execution, judgment, principal, interest and costs,¹⁹ if the value of the property equals or exceeds such amount;²⁰ or the value of the property, if it is less than or does not exceed the amount of the execution debt.²¹ Under some statutes,²² or by the terms of particular bonds,²³ the recovery may be for the amount of the judgment debt, although more than the value of the property.

b. Summary Judgment

In some jurisdictions the bond itself, when forfeited, has the force of a judgment while in other jurisdictions judgment on the bond may be entered on motion. The statutory procedure for obtaining summary judgment must be followed.

Under some statutes, the bond, when returned forfeited by the officer, accompanied by the execution, has the force and effect of a judgment, and no further judgment is necessary to the issuance of execution thereon,²⁴ although notice of motion for execution on the bond must be given.²⁵

Other statutes permit or require a formal judgment to be entered by the court on the forfeited bond,²⁶ and an essential condition precedent thereto is the service of a notice of motion for judgment on the obligors in the forfeited bond, such motion to be made returnable to a designated term of court.²⁷ A notice of motion for judgment signed by the execution creditor is sufficient, although it omits to state to whom the bond is made payable.²⁸ On the hearing of a motion for judgment on the forthcoming bond, the pleadings are ore tenus, and formal issue need not be joined, and the court may render judgment on the evidence without the intervention of a jury.²⁹

Under some statutes the bond has the force of a judgment and creates a lien on the property of the obligors only from the time it is returned forfeited and duly filed,³⁰ and even after it is filed it has the force of a judgment in a certain sense only, before execution on it is awarded.³¹ In order to authorize a judgment, the record should affirmatively show a forfeiture of the bond and a return of the execution unsatisfied,³² but, where the statute merely provides that, if the bond is forfeited, it shall be returned into court with the execution, there need be no indorsement of the forfeiture on the bond itself.³³ A statute requiring the clerk of court to indorse on the forfeited bond the date of its return has been held to be merely directory.³⁴ The sheriff's return of forfeiture is at

Execution on judgment. The general rule is that execution may issue at any time after the bond has become forfeited and, in effect, a statutory judgment.³⁷ Although there is authority to the contrary,³⁸ it has been held that an execution issued on a forfeited forthcoming bond may include defendants to the original judgment as well as obligors in the bond.³⁹ If the execution does not, on its face or by the indorsement of the clerk, show who were the obligors in the bond, it may be amended by the judgment and forthcoming bond.⁴⁰

§ 120. Expenses of Keeping Property, and Compensation of Custodian

The levying officer, and his bailee or receptor, must be reimbursed for their expenses in keeping and protecting the property.

The levying officer is entitled to reimbursement for necessary and reasonable expenses incurred by him in taking and caring for the property.⁴¹ Such expenses are chargeable as costs⁴² and may be collected out of the proceeds of the sale of the property,⁴³ or, under some circumstances, from plaintiff.⁴⁴ The officer should make the expense as light as possible consistent with the safekeeping of the property.⁴⁵

Compensation of bailee. A bailee or receptor is entitled to compensation for services rendered in keeping and protecting the property,⁴⁶ and to reimbursement for necessary expenses incurred;⁴⁷ and where the compensation has been agreed on, the right thereto cannot be defeated by the fact that the judgment on which the execution was issued was subsequently adjudged to be void, or that the bailee or receptor was only carrying out another prior contract with a third person.⁴⁸ Under some statutes the compensation of the bailee must be fixed by the court.⁴⁹

§ 122. Criminal Responsibility for Removal or Secretion of Property Levied on

Under some statutes the wrongful removal, secretion, or destruction of property levied on constitutes a crime.

Under some statutes it is a criminal offense for any one, without the execution creditor's consent, to secrete, destroy, or remove from the county where it is situated, any property which has been levied on or seized under execution,⁵⁰ and on conviction the offender may be fined in a sum equal to the value of such property and also be imprisoned.⁵¹ Under such a statute, it has been held an offense to secrete goods levied on, even though they were not owned by the execution debtor.⁵²

V. LIEN

§ 123. Nature, Creation and Existence

The lien of an execution is a right by law to charge the property of the judgment debtor subject to levy and sale with the payment of the debt.

An execution creates a lien⁵³ which does not vest in the judgment creditor either a jus in re or a jus ad rem. It is simply a right by law to charge the property of the judgment debtor which is subject to levy and sale with the payment of the debt, operating as an encumbrance on it, of which all who subsequently deal with him must at their peril take notice.⁵⁴ The lien is not a right in the property itself, but a right to levy on it to the exclusion of interests subsequently acquired.⁵⁵ The fact that the lien of an execution has attached to the property of a debtor does not divest him of his title thereto,⁵⁶ nor give to either the execution creditor or the officer to whom the writ is delivered any right to or control over such property before a levy is actually made.⁵⁷ The lien of an execution is regarded as arising from the right to sell property thereunder, and where the right of sale cannot be asserted the existence of the lien must be denied.⁵⁸

A levy on the property of the judgment debtor ordinarily, under the various statutes, gives the execution creditor a lien thereon,⁵⁹ which is a vested right.⁶⁰ Liens obtained by a levy on personalty do not, in general, require the aid of equity for their enforcement.⁶¹ An illegal levy creates no lien.⁶²

If the judgment on which an execution is issued is void, it follows, as a matter of course, that the writ and a levy thereunder give no lien.⁶³ Likewise, under some statutes, where no execution has issued on a judgment as such until more than a year from the date of its rendition, there is then no execution lien.⁶⁴ estate. Where the judgment is a lien on real estate, it has been generally recognized by the courts that an execution and levy thereunder on such real estate creates no new or separate lien from the lien of the judgment,⁶⁵ and does not even extend the lien of the judgment,⁶⁶ except by virtue of a statute to that effect.⁶⁷ Where, however, land is levied on under an execution issued on a judgment which is not a lien on such land, the execution creates a lien on it.⁶⁸ The lien of a testatum execution upon land is an independent one.⁶⁹

§ 124. Commencement

Usually, under the statutes, an execution lien attaches on delivery of the writ to the proper officer to be executed.

At common law,⁷⁰ and where the rule has not been changed by statute,⁷¹ an execution issued on a judgment of a court of record relates back to the teste of the writ, and binds the debtor's personal property from the time the execution was awarded. To prevent the embarrassment to trade resulting from this rule, an English statute, 29 Car. II c 3 § 16, provided that no writ of execution should bind the debtor's property, except from the time of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff,⁷² which has been adopted as part of the common law in some jurisdictions and, with more or less variations, incorporated into the statutory law of many jurisdictions.⁷³ Under such statutes the lien of the execution cannot antedate the issuance and delivery of the execution to the proper officer.⁷⁴ Under these statutes, a levy is not essential to a lien,⁷⁵ although essential to the right of possession,⁷⁶ but when possession is taken the right relates back to the time the writ came to the hands of the officer.⁷⁷

In Kentucky

(1) Under Ky.St. § 1660, a fieri facias on a judgment in personam does not create a lien until placed for execution in the hands of an officer who is authorized to execute it.—Fannin's Ex'r v. Haney, 140 S. W.2d 630, 283 Ky. 68—Graham v. Humm, 229 S.W. 80, 191 Ky. 28.

Daniel Boone Coal Corporation, D.C.Ky., 58 F.2d 305, 314.

(3) It has been stated, however, that when executions were issued they created a lien on all of the property of the debtor subject to execution.—Webster v. Industrial Acceptance Corporation, 28 S.W.2d 959, 234 Ky. 613.

Debtor's possession

A levy made in 1933 on an execution renewed from 1931 cannot have the effect of creating a lien as of the latter date where it does not appear that the property seized was

In other words, the lien acquired by the delivery is inchoate and becomes perfected by actual levy.⁷⁸

It has been held that the provision of the statute changing the common-law rule as above set forth applies only in favor of third persons, and does not change the common-law rule of the relation of the lien to the teste of the writ as between the execution debtor and the creditor.⁷⁹

Under some statutes an execution is a lien on property only from the time of the levy thereof.⁸⁰ In some states, by statute, there is no lien, prior to a levy, as against purchasers and encumbrancers in good faith and without notice, whose rights attached between the delivery and the levy of the execution.⁸¹ It is generally held, in the absence of statute to the contrary, that an execution is not a lien upon real estate, independent of the judgment lien, without a levy.⁸² Under some statutes, where land outside the county is levied on, there is no lien until a certificate of levy is filed in such county.⁸³ Under other statutes the execution must be docketed as against third persons.⁸⁴

Failure of officer to indorse receipt of writ. A provision of law, where the lien of an execution commences from its delivery to the proper officer, requiring him to indorse on the execution the day of its receipt, is directory merely and intended only to be evidence of such receipt. The failure of the officer to make such entry cannot prejudice the execution plaintiff,⁸⁵ and he may show the time of the delivery by extrinsic evidence.⁸⁶

Lis pendens. In some states, to create a lien good against purchasers, a lis pendens notice must be filed.⁸⁷

Relation back to time of attachment. An execution levy relates back to the levy of an attachment so as to hold the interest then owned by defendant.⁸⁸

§ 125. Property or Interests Affected, and Extent of Lien

Ordinarily the lien of an execution binds all property which is subject to levy and sale under its mandate.

It may be stated as a general rule that the lien of an execution operates on and binds all property which is the subject of levy and sale in obedience to its mandate,⁸⁹ and consequently it is sometimes termed a "general lien," to distinguish it from liens which operate only on specific or particular property.⁹⁰ In the absence of a statute to the contrary, in order that property may be bound Oil or gas lease

The operating or lessee's interest under a producing oil and gas lease, limited to a term of years and so long thereafter as oil or gas shall be produced from the leased premises, is a chattel real and as such is subject to the lien of an execution.—

Drainer v. Travis, 180 S.E. 435, 116 W.Va. 390.

Real or personal

As a general rule, the lien of an execution operates on and binds all property, real or personal, which is the subject of levy and sale in obedience to its mandate.—Evins v. Gainesville Nat. Bank, 85 So. 659, 80 Fla. 84.

Thing not in being

It is obvious that an execution lien cannot attach to a thing not shown to be in being.—In re Laskaris, D.C.N.Y., 4 F.Supp. 652.

Trust funds

Under a statute permitting an execution against income from trust funds due and owing to the judgment debtor or thereafter to become due and owing to him, when an execution becomes effective it attaches as a lien on any sum which may become due and payable to the debtor from a trust fund.—In re Randolph's Will, 288 N.Y.S. 678, 159 Misc. 688.

Unadministered personal property

Lien of execution based on judgment against executor of deceased's estate was held not to attach to unadministered personal property of estate in hands of the personal representative.—Drainer v. Travis, 180 S.E. 435, 116 W.Va. 390.

by the lien of an execution, it is necessary that the debtor should have the title thereto;⁹¹ and an execution does not give rise to a lien on a mere equitable estate or interest.⁹² In the absence of circumstances giving an execution lien priority over other liens or claims, see infra §§ 128, 129, the lien extends only to the debtor's actual interest,⁹³ and an apparent interest neither extends nor restricts the operation of the lien.⁹⁴ If, however, the title or interest is such as to be subject to the lien under the statute, the lien attaches to whatever title or interest the debtor has,⁹⁵ subject to all prior equities,⁹⁶ including existing encumbrances such as liens, mortgages, and pledges.⁹⁷ Property seized by the sheriff under a prior execution has been held to be subject to the lien of a subsequent execution, subject to the lien accruing in favor of the prior execution.⁹⁸ Ordinarily, under the statutes, the lien does not cover a contingent liability,⁹⁹ unliquidated claims,¹ or amounts which may become due upon performance of an executory contract, but which are not presently due,² except under statutes broad enough to include such interests.³ It is not a lien on property purchased by, and in the possession of, another creditor before the issuance of the execution.⁴

Under some statutes if the property, on which the writ is a lien, is a debt or liability of some third person to pay money or deliver property to the judgment debtor, any payment or delivery made by such third person to the judgment debtor or his assignee, before such third person has notice of the writ, is good, and such person is discharged, to the extent of such payment or delivery, from any liability to the judgment creditor.⁵ On the other hand, under such statute, where one who

Deed absolute on face

By virtue of execution and levy, judgment did not become a lien on realty which judgment debtor had conveyed by a deed absolute on its face, although the deed was in effect a mortgage given to secure an indebtedness. —McLaughlin v. Whaland, 13 A.2d 573, 127 N.J.Eq. 393.

Equities of redemption; equitable titles

(1) Where, under the statute, only "lands and tenements, goods and chattels, equities of redemption in real and personal property, and stock in corporations," are subject to levy and sale under execution, an execution is a lien on all equities of redemption, although not on equitable titles. —George E. Sebring Co. v. O'Rourke, 134 So. 556, 101 Fla. 885.

(2) Accordingly a mortgage on real estate, being merely a contract lien on land, is not subject to the lien of an execution. —Evins v. Gainesville Nat. Bank, 85 So. 659, 80 Fla. 84.

Property fraudulently conveyed

Under a statute providing that, where a conveyance is fraudulent as to a creditor, such creditor may disregard the conveyance and levy execution on the property conveyed, where a judgment creditor levies on lands conveyed by his debtor he obtains valid lien thereby, if it be proved that the conveyance was fraudulent as to him. —Swift & Co. v. holds an execution debtor's personal property or money, and thereafter, with notice of the execution, delivers or pays the same to the debtor, he is liable therefor to the execution creditor.⁶ The notice contemplated by such a statute is actual knowledge or notice, at least where the statute contains no provision for the service of notice, nor prescribes any formality to make it effective.⁷

After-acquired property. The general lien of an execution binds not merely the goods and chattels which the debtor has at the time when it is placed in the sheriff's hands, but also all goods and chattels acquired by him while the writ is current and unsatisfied.⁸ Conversely, in the absence of statutory provision therefor, the lien does not extend to property acquired after the return day of the execution,⁹ at least where there has been no preservation of the lien by the securing of new executions within the rules hereinafter discussed in § 131. It is held in some cases that property acquired by an execution debtor, after levy of the writ is not subject to the lien of the execution,¹⁰ unless the debtor has voluntarily mingled it with the property liable to be sold.¹¹

Reducing to judgment a claim on which the liens of executions have attached and subsist, the date of the judgment postdating the return day of the executions, is not acquiring new property in a sense that defeats the liens of the executions on the indebtedness reduced to judgment.¹²

*Money in the hands of the execution debtor not in current circulation is subject to an execution lien.*¹³

Property not subject to levy. Generally, property not subject to levy is not bound by the lien of an execution.¹⁴ However, under some statutes all personal estate of which the judgment debtor is possessed or to which he is entitled, although not levied on nor capable of being levied on, is subject to the lien.¹⁵

§ 126. — Territorial Extent

The lien of an execution is ordinarily coextensive with the jurisdiction of the officer to whom the writ is delivered.

The general rule as to the territorial extent of the lien of an execution is that it is coextensive with the jurisdiction of the officer to whom the writ is delivered, and attaches to all defendant's goods and chattels within such territory, and as the writ is in most cases delivered to the sheriff or some other officer whose jurisdiction has the same limits, its lien usually extends throughout the county in which it is issued and no further.¹⁶ Under some statutes, however, the rule is that the lien of an execution extends to defendant's property throughout the state.¹⁷ Under other statutes, when a writ of execution is issued from the district court of one county to the sheriff of another, and levied on the real estate of the judgment debtor in the latter county, it is made the duty of the officer making such levy to make and file in the recorder's office of the county where the real estate is situated a certificate of levy, and until this is done the lien does not attach.¹⁸

§ 127. Priorities between Executions

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the various execution creditors are ordinarily entitled to be satisfied in the order of the legal priority of their executions.

tion creditors are entitled to be satisfied from property levied on in the order of the legal priority of their executions.¹⁹ The time of the commencement of an execution lien has already been considered in § 124. Such priority, of course, may be defeated by loss or suspension of the lien.²⁰

Priority according to teste of writs. In the jurisdictions where, and in the times when, the common-law rule as to the lien of an execution from its teste has prevailed, executions take priority according to their teste, without reference to the time of their delivery to the sheriff, provided all are delivered before their return days and before a sale of the debtor's property.²¹ Under the common-law doctrine writs tested at the same term are on a perfect equality, since each is tested as of the first day of the term.²²

Priority according to delivery of writs. Where the statute provides that an execution shall bind the debtor's property from the time the writ is delivered to the officer to be executed, it is generally held, frequently by virtue of express statutory direction, that several executions against the same debtor take priority in the order in which they are delivered, notwithstanding a levy is first made by virtue of a writ subsequently delivered, and it is the right and duty of the officer to apply the proceeds of a levy and sale under any writ to the satisfaction of all writs in his hands in the order of priority in which they were delivered to him.²³ Where the lien ceases on return of the writ, see infra § 131 if a writ is returned unsatisfied it loses its priority in favor of subsequent outstanding writs²⁴ which must be satisfied before an alias

feri facias subsequently issued, since such alias feri facias ranks only from the time of its delivery,²⁵ except where the lien of the original execution is duly preserved and continued.²⁶ Likewise, if the writ first delivered becomes dormant, or functus officio, it loses its priority over writs subsequently delivered.²⁷ A writ, although first delivered, is not entitled to priority where it was not delivered to be executed.²⁸ There is no priority as between several executions delivered to the officer at the same time and all share proportionately.²⁹ In the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is generally held that writs delivered on the same day take priority according to the actual priority in time of delivery,³⁰ although under the rule that fractions of a day are not regarded, see the C.J.S. title Time § 16, also 62 C.J. p 978 note 94—p 981 note 29, it has been held, even in the absence of express statute, that writs delivered on the same day are to be deemed delivered at the same time.³¹ In a few cases, on special facts superior diligence in finding and subjecting assets has been allowed to give priority to a junior writ, notwithstanding recognition of the general rule;³² but ordinarily priority cannot be gained by diligence; delivery of the writ governs.³³

It has been held to be the duty of a sheriff holding several executions against a common debtor, when making a levy of one, to levy them all, to the end that each levy may relate back to the time the writ was received by the sheriff.³⁴ It has likewise been held to be the duty of the officer to levy first the writ which first comes to his hands.³⁵ There is a presumption that the officer levied first

19. Property conditionally sold

A creditor who levies on property conditionally sold has a prior lien thereon where the conditional vendor caused title to vest in the vendee by subsequently levying thereon as property of the vendee.—E. L. Jones & Co. v. Unruh, 182 A. 211, 7 W.W. Harr., Del., 241.

Several delivered at same time

If several writs are delivered to the sheriff at the same time, it is his duty to levy all at the same time so as to create no preference between them.—State v. Cisney, 95 Ind. 265—23 C.J. p 504 note 23.

the writ first received,³⁶ and, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, where two seizures were made on the same day, by the same officer the writ first received by the sheriff is entitled to priority by virtue of the presumption that it was levied first.³⁷

In some jurisdictions where the general rule prevails that priority depends on delivery of the writs, there are statutory exceptions to it. Thus under some statutes it is held that there shall be a pro rata distribution without preference between executions delivered to the officer on the same day,³⁸ or between writs sued out during the term in which judgment was rendered, or within a limited time thereafter,³⁹ but that in all other cases, the writ first delivered to the officer shall be first satisfied.⁴⁰ Under other statutes judgments rendered at the same term are deemed of equal date, and no execution thereon is entitled to any preference by reason of being first placed in the hands of the levying officer.⁴¹

Priority according to date of levy. Where an execution is a lien only from the time it is levied, see supra § 124, in the absence of a statute to the contrary⁴² an execution first levied has priority over other executions regardless of the time when they were issued or delivered to the officer for execution,⁴³ notwithstanding it is the duty of the sheriff to execute writs in the order in which they are delivered,⁴⁴ and, even if the money realized on the junior execution remains in the hands of the sheriff, the court cannot order it to be applied to the satisfaction of a senior execution.⁴⁵ Generally, in the absence of any judgment or execution lien, and subject to statutory exceptions, the execution first levied has priority,⁴⁶ as where the rival executions are issued on judgments, the liens of which have all expired,⁴⁷ or where for any reason the judgment liens are all invalid.⁴⁸ Where after-acquired realty is not bound by the lien of judgments previously entered, the first execution levied takes priority.⁴⁹

Under statutes whereby an execution binds the debtor's property from the time of delivery of the writ to the officer, it has been held that as between different execution creditors no lien or priority is created by the mere delivery of the execution, and that the writ first levied is entitled to priority.⁵⁰ Under some statutes, an execution issued out of a court not of record, if actually levied, has preference over another execution issued out of any court, of record or not of record, which has not been previously levied.⁵¹

Priority according to rendition or lien of judgment. As a general rule, subject to statutory variations,⁵² as to property on which the judgment is a lien, executions take priority according to the dates and priorities of their respective judgment liens.⁵³ Where under the statute, a judgment binds all the property of the debtor, both real and personal, all executions take priority according to the priority of the judgment liens.⁵⁴ Where several judgments are actually, or in legal contemplation, all of the same date, as where they were rendered at the same term or on the same day, under some statutes no priority can be acquired by issuing or levying execution and all share pro rata;⁵⁵ under other statutes, the execution first levied takes priority under such conditions,⁵⁶ even when the several liens are created by the same judgment or decree.⁵⁷ The same conflict of rule exists as to after-acquired property on which existing judgments become liens at the same time, some courts holding that the proceeds must be applied pro rata,⁵⁸ while others give priority to the writ first levied,⁵⁹ and still others to the judgment first docketed.⁶⁰ It has been held that a levy on an older judgment whose lien has expired will have preference over an execution on a junior judgment whose lien has not expired if such levy is made before the date of the junior judgment.⁶¹ Under some statutes, prior levy under a junior judgment gives priority provided previous notice of intention to levy has been given to the holder of the senior judgment who nevertheless neglects to levy within the statutory time limit.⁶² The issuance and levy of an execution within a limited time after judgment is sometimes required to preserve and maintain the preference given by priority of judgment lien.⁶³ A priority or equality of lien may be lost by election to pursue an inconsistent remedy, pending which another writ is levied.⁶⁴

Priority as dependent on subject matter of judgment. An execution may have a priority over other executions against the same debtor on account of the subject matter of the judgment on which it is founded being in the nature of a preferred claim,⁶⁵ as in the case of executions for the enforcement of a lien.⁶⁶ In the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁶⁷ executions for purchase money have no priority because of the origin of the debt.⁶⁸ Statutes providing that property shall be subject to execution for its purchase price have been construed as merely creating an exception to the exemption statutes, and not as creating a lien or giving priority as between executions.⁶⁹ Execution for the debt of a testator has priority over one for the debt of the executor.⁷⁰ There is no inherent priority as between executions on judgments at law and decrees in equity for the payment of money.⁷¹ At common law, and under some statutes, an execution in favor of the state takes priority over one in favor of an individual without regard to the date of lien.⁷²

Different courts or officers. The rule that conflicting executions take priority among themselves from the time of delivery to the officer for execution is generally applied even to writs coming from different courts and held by the same or different officers,⁷³ even though the first one has been stayed,⁷⁴ and even, it has been held, although the writ first delivered has been returned nulla bona.⁷⁵ Under some statutes, either by express provision or by judicial construction, the rule is that priority of delivery determines priority of right as between writs in the hands of the same officer, but that priority of levy determines priority as between writs held by different officers,⁷⁶ and a statute providing that an execution binds the debtor's property from the time of delivery of the writ to the officer has been construed as intended to bind the debtor's property only as against voluntary transfers, and not as against transfers by compulsory process.⁷⁷ Writs from different courts of the same state have been given priority according to which was first levied,⁷⁸ even where both writs were directed to the same officer.⁷⁹ A sheriff and his deputies are all considered as constituting the same officer within the meaning of these rules.⁸⁰

Where one writ issues from a federal court and the other from a state court, the writ first actually levied has priority.⁸¹

The rule that the lien of an alias execution relates to the teste of the original is not affected by the fact that the alias issued from the court of another county, while a junior execution issued from the court of the county where the property lies.⁸²

Priority as affected by invalidity of levy or irregularities in writ. An execution, the levy of which is defective by reason of noncompliance with some statutory provision, such as irregularity in the return,⁸³ or failure to record,⁸⁴ has been postponed to a junior execution, which has been levied in strict compliance with the statute. Where,

however, the prior writ is not void, the fact that it is irregular or erroneous does not affect its priority over subsequent regular writs.⁸⁵

§ 128. Priorities between Executions and Other Liens or Claims

- a. In general
- b. Landlord's lien
- c. Unrecorded instruments

a. In General

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, an execution lien usually takes priority over all claims and liens subsequently arising, and is inferior to all valid claims and liens existing against the property at the time the lien attaches.

As a general rule an execution lien from the time it attaches and for as long as it is continued takes priority over all claims and liens subsequently arising,⁸⁶ such as subsequent mechanics' liens⁸⁷ or real estate mortgages.⁸⁸ On the other hand, an execution is subject and subordinate to all valid claims and liens existing against the property at the time the execution lien attaches,⁸⁹ such as

Notwithstanding preference

Lien resting on valid judgment and execution cannot be set aside or diminished because, through insolvency of judgment debtor, enforcement of lien may give holder preference over less diligent creditors. —Newman v. Property fraudulently conveyed

The priority of lien obtained by a judgment creditor levying on land fraudulently conveyed is not disturbed by the subsequent filing of a bill in equity by another creditor to have the conveyance declared fraudulent. —Swift & Co. v. pledges,⁹⁰ real estate mortgages,⁹¹ or tenancy for years.⁹² Of course the execution is paramount to claims and liens which are wholly void, or void as to creditors,⁹³ and, conversely, any fact which defeats the lien of the execution may give priority to claims otherwise subordinate.⁹⁴

Appointment of receiver. It has been held that an execution, issued and delivered to the sheriff before a receiver was appointed for the execution debtor, is prior to the title of the receiver.⁹⁵ Likewise, where a receiver is appointed, who takes possession of property, which has been previously levied upon by the sheriff on executions issued on judgments obtained prior to the appointment of such receiver, the receiver will be required to pay first the amount of such executions out of the property in his possession.⁹⁶ Void executions,⁹⁷ or executions subsequent to the receiver's appointment,⁹⁸ or subsequent to initiation of proceedings by the attaching creditors for such appointment,⁹⁹ confer no priority.

Growing crops

Levy of execution by judgment creditor on growing crops while remaining part of realty was invalid and ineffective as against a prior mortgagee under mortgage including rents, issues, and profits.—In re Bunting, D.C.Ill., 60 F.2d 605.

Loan to pay superior liens

The lien of execution creditors has been held to be superior to that of a mortgagee who loaned money to pay debts superior to the lien of execution creditors, where the mortgagee simply loaned the money to pay such debts and did not purchase the same or take an assignment thereof, and the mortgagee has no claim as against the execution creditors to be subrogated to the rights of the original creditors.—Lane v. Lloyd, 110 S.W. 401, 33 Ky. L. 570, distinguishing Bradley v. Curtis, 79 Ky. 327, and Harrod v. Johnson, 5 Ky.L. 247.

Rents

Where a mortgage which is in default conveys rents, issues, and profits of mortgaged realty to mortgagee, a judgment creditor of the mortgagor issuing an attachment execution and serving the mortgagor's tenant as garnishee, whereupon the mortgagee gave notice to and made demand on the tenant to pay rent to him, is entitled to rents accrued before such notice was given, but not to rents accruing thereafter.—Miners Sav. Bank of Pittston v. Thomas, 12 A.2d 810, 140 Pa.Super. 5.

92. Under statute providing that the right of possession of a tenant for years shall be deemed paramount to that of a purchaser at a judicial sale if, and only if, the letting to him shall precede in point of date the entry of the judgment, order, or decree on which such sale was had, and also shall precede the recording or registering of the mortgage, deed, or will, if any, through which by legal proceedings the purchaser derives title, the right of possession of a purchaser at sheriff's sale under an execution on a judgment entered on a bond accompanying a mortgage is subordinate to that of a tenant for years whose lease antedates the entry of the judgment, although not the recording of the mortgage.—Brown v. Lien on chattels

In Pennsylvania, lien on chattels except as permitted by statute, is invalid as against execution creditors.—Bucyrus-Erie Co. v. Casey, C.C.A.Pa., 61 F.2d 473.

Failure to perfect rights

It has been held that an assignee of future rents who has done nothing to perfect his rights will not prevail over an execution creditor.—In re McCrory Stores Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 73 F.2d 270.

Mortgage

(1) Where there was no subsisting indebtedness to support a note and mortgage to secure the same at the time an execution was levied on the lands, the mortgage was inferior to the right of the execution creditor.—People's State Bank v. Buchanan, 145 N.E. 898, 86 Ind.App. 517.

Posting of notice of sale

On constable's failure to post written notice, execution became dormant only as to liens attaching subsequently and certain bona fide purchasers.—Williams v. Standard Oil Co. of New York, 219 N.Y.S. 541, 219 App.Div. 193.

thereby have been held to be concurrent.¹

Conditional sale. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, it has been held that the lien of an execution is paramount to the rights in the property possessed by the vendor under a contract of conditional sale.² Where execution is issued and levy thereunder made before the conditional vendor's right to retake the property has become complete, the execution lien is superior to the vendor's right to retake, and the execution creditor is entitled to enforce his lien on the conditional vendee's interest in the property.³ On the other hand, if there has been a default on the part of the vendee prior to the levy of execution, under some statutes the vendor's right to retake the property is complete and superior to the execution lien.⁴

Livery-stable keeper's lien. It has been held that the statutory lien of a livery-stable keeper is superior to that of an execution levied on a horse while temporarily in his owner's possession.⁵

Property previously attached. Where real estate has been attached and the attachment preserved, an execution levied under a judgment recovered in such suit operates as a lien from the date of the attachment, prior to all encumbrances created by the debtor subsequent to the levy of the writ of attachment.⁶

Widow's allowance. Although in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the lien of an execution is superior to a widow's allowance in the estate of the judgment debtor,⁷ ordinarily under the statutes a widow's allowance is superior to the lien arising from the delivery of an execution to the sheriff before the death of the judgment debtor.⁸ Where levy has been made before the death of the husband, it has been held that, since he had not parted with the title or surrendered ownership, the widow was entitled to her statutory allowance in preference to the right of the execution creditor,⁹ although it has also been held that by the levy the officer acquires a special property in the goods, and that the husband does not die seized or possessed of the property within the meaning of the statute granting a widow's allowance.¹⁰

b. Landlord's Lien

A landlord's lien, under the various statutes, is usually granted priority over an execution lien.

Ordinarily, frequently by virtue of express statutory provision, a landlord's lien is paramount to the lien of an execution,¹¹ and accordingly the landlord's lien on the crop raised by a tenant,¹² the tenant's machinery and other chattels in a leased mill, factory, loft, or other manufacturing space,¹³ or the tenant's stock of goods in the leased premises¹⁴ has been afforded priority.

One year's rent

Under a statute authorizing distress for rent and providing that if an outside lien attach to the property while on the leased premises, the property nevertheless shall be liable to distress, "but for not more than one year's rent, whether it shall have accrued before or after the creation of the lien," a landlord's lien for rent within the statute takes precedence over an execution lien.—State ex rel. Hodges v. Hutchinson, 197 S.E. 359, 120 W.Va. 181.

has caused to be seized the goods and chattels of a tenant on the demised premises, must pay the rent so in arrear for such premises for a period not in excess of one year, before the goods and chattels may be moved by the officer;¹⁵ or, if not removed, but sold on the premises, the officer must pay the rent due, not in the excess of one year, out of the proceeds of the sale in his hands, see infra § 247. Ordinarily, under the statute, notice of the landlord's claim for rent must be given before the goods are removed from the premises.¹⁶ Under some statutes, the preference given to the landlord exists only where the tenancy is in existence at the time of seizure under execution,¹⁷ although under other statutes such preference will be given whenever the rent is in arrear and the landlord retains his title, notwithstanding the termination of the tenancy.¹⁸ As the object of the statute is to secure to landlords the benefit of a specific lien in certain cases where otherwise they would be deprived of the right of distress by the operation of a principle of law, the statutory remedy exists only where the goods taken in execution are such as the landlord might have distrained on but for the prior levy of the execution.¹⁹ Under some statutes the landlord is entitled to a preference only where the goods levied on under execution are the property of the tenant;²⁰ but under other statutes the landlord is preferred whether the goods levied on belong to the tenant or to some other person.²¹ In some jurisdictions the statute is held to apply only between a landlord and his immediate lessee, and not between the landlord and a subtenant whose goods have been seized on execution;²² and in other jurisdictions it is held that the statute extends also to the case of landlord and subtenant.²³ In some states the statute of Anne has been either superseded by legislation,²⁴ or entirely abolished.²⁵

Under some statutes, when it appears that the premises are held at a rent certain for which the landlord might, by law, distrain, the officer is required to pay such rent before removing the tenant's goods under an execution.²⁶

c. Unrecorded Instruments

Under some of the recording acts, an execution will take priority over a prior unrecorded instrument.

By virtue of statute executions sometimes take priority over prior claims based on unrecorded instruments.²⁷ Accordingly, under statutes requiring mortgages and conditional sales to be recorded to be valid against bona fide creditors and purchasers for value, the lien of an execution is superior to that of a prior unrecorded mortgage or sale of which the judgment creditor had no notice,²⁸ although the instrument was recorded before the ex-

Right to distrain

The statute does not authorize the landlord to distrain for his year's rent goods taken in execution.—Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana, Ky., 205—36 C.J. p 565 note 72.

Statute inapplicable

A statute providing that as against an execution creditor the landlord's lien shall not be for more than one year's rent when such creditor pays the rent in arrears, not to exceed one year, is inapplicable to invalidate the landlord's distress for rent due for more than one year, where no payment of one year's rent in fulfillment of the statute was made.—Maynard v. Bank of Kershaw, 193 S.E. 188, 188 S.C. 160.

Such statute is not superseded by a statute providing that, whenever a tenant is adjudicated a bankrupt, rent which may then be due for a period not exceeding three months shall constitute a lien upon, and shall have priority of payment in full out of, the tenant's distrainable property.—In re Seward, D.C.Md., 8 F.Supp. 865.

execution sale,²⁹ or even before levy,³⁰ where the lien of an execution attaches before levy, see supra § 124. In some jurisdictions, under the existing statutes, it has been held that the lien of a bona fide mortgagee under an unrecorded mortgage is entitled to priority over the lien of an execution subsequently levied, provided the mortgage is duly recorded before sale under such execution.³¹ Under some statutes a levy of an execution is necessary before a lien arises superior to the rights of a seller under an unrecorded conditional sales contract.³² Actual notice of a prior unrecorded lien will ordinarily prevent a subsequent execution from gaining priority over it,³³ actual notice supplying the place of recording.³⁴ Notice after levy but before sale has been held sufficient to have this effect,³⁵ but the rule is otherwise under some statutes.³⁶

Deeds. With some exceptions,³⁷ under the various recording acts, an execution levied on land gives the execution creditor and the purchaser at the execution sale priority of right over the grantee in an earlier but unrecorded deed of the same land,³⁸ of which deed the creditor has no notice at the time of levy.³⁹ Under some statutes notice after levy

32. In New York, under Pers.Prop. L. § 65, as to all creditors, except those who acquire a lien by levy or attachment, a conditional sale remains valid, and no title passes to become subject to the lien of an execution. The provisions of Civ.Pract. Act § 679 that the goods and chattels of a judgment debtor are bound by the execution from the time of the delivery thereof to the proper officer does not create a lien against chattels in the hands of a conditional buyer. Consequently, where there has been no levy of an execution before a copy of the contract has been filed as required by law, chattels in the hands of a conditional buyer are not goods or chattels of a judgment debtor to which the lien of an execution might attach.—*Baker v. Announcement at sale

Where judgment creditor of buyer of truck under conditional sale contract and constable levying writ of execution had no notice of the conditional sale contract and thereby acquired a lien on truck, an announcement made at execution sale from which an inference might be drawn that assignee of conditional sale contract had an interest in the truck would not affect the lien theretofore acquired.—*Maryland Credit Finance Corporation v. Property in two parishes

Where a purchaser acquired property which was divided by the boundary line between two adjoining parishes, and registered his deed in one of the parishes only, it was held that the part lying in the other parish was liable to sale under execution by a creditor of the grantor having no notice.—Dooley v. Delaney, 6 La. Ann. 67.

Security deed

Where defendant, by a deed absolute in form, conveyed land to R to secure a loan, and after the loan was paid R executed a reconveyance to defendant but it was not filed for record until several years later, and after plaintiff had obtained a judgment against R and had issued execution thereon, it was held that plaintiff could not subject such land to his judgment against R, since he had a lien only on the debtor's actual interest in the land and the registration statutes did not apply to such a case.—Mickael v. Knapp, 23 S.W. 280, 4 Tex.Civ.App. 464.

Possession

(1) Possession under an unrecorded deed may operate as notice.—Hodge v. Amerman, 2 A. 257, 40 N.J. Eq. 99—Lewis v. Hall, 7 N.J. Eq. 107—23 C.J. p 510 note 4 [b].

(2) Under the circumstances of the particular case it was held that the possession by the vendee of an unrecorded deed was not such as to operate as notice to the execution creditor.—Ex parte City of Anderson, 62 S.E. 513, 82 S.C. 131, affirmed 63 S.E. 354, 82 S.C. 131.

In Tennessee the rule has been laid down, however, that creditors are not affected by even actual notice of any real estate deeds, and that land held by such title may be levied on and sold under execution against the grantor.—Coward v. Culver, 12 Heisk. 540.

but before sale is of no effect;⁴⁰ in others it gives priority to the elder claim.⁴¹ Where the statutory protection is limited to bona fide purchasers without notice, a purchaser at the execution sale is protected against an unrecorded deed of which he had no notice at the time of his purchase,⁴² but not against deeds of which he has actual notice⁴³ or which have been recorded before such sale.⁴⁴ Notice to the purchaser at the execution sale is immaterial where the execution creditor is entitled to priority by reason of want of notice, as otherwise the priority of the creditor might be illusory.⁴⁵

Executions. In jurisdictions where the statute requires that the execution shall be entered on an execution docket within a prescribed period after its issuance, or otherwise recorded, and the statutory requirement is not complied with, a subsequent bona fide purchaser or mortgagee of such property without actual notice of the levy will take the property free from the lien of such execution.⁴⁶ So, where the levy is required to be recorded, priority is given to subsequent purchasers without notice of an unrecorded levy.⁴⁷

§ 129. — Transfer of Property

As a general rule a subsequent purchaser or assignee who acquires property which is subject to the lien of an execution takes such property subject to such lien, at least where he does not occupy the position of a bona fide purchaser.

The general rule is that where property, either real⁴⁸ or personal⁴⁹ is subject to the lien of an execution issued on a valid judgment, a subsequent

(1) Such subsequent purchaser must prove that he acted in good faith and without notice in making the purchase.—Greene v. Matthews, 120 S.E. 434, 31 Ga.App. 265—23 C.J. p 510 note 11 [b] (1).

(2) Where there is no extraneous evidence as to a consideration, a subsequent deed cannot be aided by the execution creditor's failure to obtain entry, and under such circumstances the deed must yield to the older execution lien.—Beam v. Rome Hardware Co., 191 S.E. 126, 184 Ga. 272.

(3) Under the statutes of this state, entry of an execution on the general execution docket of a county in which land of defendant is located, other than the county in which the judgment was obtained or the county in which defendant resided at the commencement of the suit, will convey constructive notice of the judgment and cause the lien of the judgment to affect the land as against a bona fide purchaser for value, without actual knowledge of the judgment, who acquires the land after the execution has been entered on the docket. Relatively to land of defendant so located, it is not necessary, in order to bind the property as against such purchaser, that the execution be entered on the general execution docket of the county in which the judgment was obtained or the county in which defendant resided.—Citizens' Bank v. Jenkins, 120 S.E. 607, 156 Ga. 874.

Necessity of bill in aid of execution
Defendants' interest at time of execution levy before they sold property was properly sold without filing bill in aid of execution.—Wernik v. Kolodziejczak, 215 N.W. 360, 240 Mich. 468.

Conveyance to mortgagee

One holding a judgment lien on real estate may cause the land to be levied on and sold on execution subject to a prior lien, although the debtor may have previously conveyed the property to the mortgagee in satisfaction of the mortgage indebtedness.—Montgomery County Nat. Bank v. Backus, 196 P. 1074, 108 Kan. 779.

Amount paid pledgor

An execution lien is entitled to priority over the rights of a pledgee to the extent of the consideration paid the pledgor for the pledged property after the levy of the execution.—Bronson v. Willis, 194 So. 245, 142 Fla. 64.

After sale of pledged property

Where pledgor consented to sale of pledge by pledgee, thereby validating the sale and ratifying any irregularities therein, the rights of an execution creditor of the pledgor who subsequently levied on the property are inferior to the rights of the purchaser, particularly where the execution creditor had notice of the claims of the purchaser.—Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Holbrook, 24 P. 2d 169, 218 Cal. 531.

purchaser or assignee is bound to take notice of such outstanding lien, and acquires the property subject thereto. It is immaterial that there is other property sufficient to satisfy the execution.⁵⁰ The levy of an officer under an execution does not convert the title of defendant in execution into a mere right of action, and he may still transfer his title to the property as though no levy had been made, subject to all rights arising from the levy, so long as the property remains in custodia legis.⁵¹ A purchaser from an execution debtor may of course acquire a good title even as against the execution creditor, by the running of the statute of limitations in his favor, and by continued adverse possession.⁵² A sale of property not subject to the execution lien,⁵³ or before such lien has attached thereto,⁵⁴ passes a good title free from the claim of the execution creditors.

Bona fide purchasers. Ordinarily, under the statutes, bona fide purchasers who acquire their rights prior to actual levy and without notice of an outstanding execution lien are protected against such execution,⁵⁵ but if an actual levy has been made such purchasers take subject thereto, although without notice of the execution.⁵⁶

Transfer without visible change of possession. Under the rule that retention of possession of goods and chattels by the seller is prima facie or conclusive evidence of fraud on existing creditors of the seller, see the C.J.S. title Fraudulent Conveyances §§ 188-191, also 27 C.J. p 574 note 29-p 579 note 73, the lien of an execution creditor has been held to be superior to a prior sale without actual delivery.⁵⁷

§ 130. Proceedings to Determine Priorities

The availability of various remedies to determine priorities between execution liens, and between execution liens and other liens and claims, has been judicially determined.

The question of priority as between an execution lien and a previous conveyance or mortgage having an apparent priority, but alleged to be fraudulent or for some other reason subject to the execution, may be determined on a bill in equity.⁵⁸ Under some statutes a determination of priorities may be had in summary proceedings.⁵⁹ It has been held that priority between executions issued out of a law court should be determined by such court, and not in a court of equity.⁶⁰ The priority of the lien of an execution over a chattel mortgage has also been determined in an action of replevin.⁶¹

Proceedings for distribution of proceeds of an execution sale are considered infra § 252. Whether the sheriff made a particular statement, which is alleged to have released the lien, is a question of fact which is settled by the verdict of the jury.⁶²

§ 131. Duration

As a general rule an execution lien continues as long as the writ remains in force.

The duration of the lien of an execution is largely a matter of statutory regulation,⁶³ and, subject to

Validity of prior deed or mortgage

(1) It has been held that the validity of a prior deed or mortgage may be tried in such a proceeding.—Bussiere v. Williams, 37 La.App. 387—State v. Judges, 33 La.App. 1351—New Orleans Canal & Banking Co. v. Recorder of Mortgages, 27 La.App. 291.

(2) It has also been held, however, that the validity of a prior deed or mortgage must be determined in a plenary suit, and cannot be had on a summary application by rule to show cause why it should not be canceled.—Morgan v. Wintercast, 6 La.App. 485.

60. Procedure

Where executions issued out of the circuit court against the same debtor but in favor of different judgment creditors, circuit court could on petition and motion order sheriff to proceed to a sale and to pay the money realized into circuit court, which should thereupon determine the priority between the executions.—Walton v. Hillier, 20 A.2d 420, 129 N.J.Eq. 330.

Scope of inquiry

In settling priorities, the circuit court is not limited to the record of the judgments and executions, but may go into extrinsic evidence of any matter pertinent to the inquiry, including even questions of fraud.—Walton v. Hillier, supra.

statutory variations, it is a general rule that an execution lien continues as long as the writ remains in force, and that the lien ceases when the writ is functus officio.⁶⁴ Loss or suspension of execution liens by extrinsic events will be discussed in §§ 132-137 infra.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the lien of an execution ceases on the return of the writ nulla bona or on the return day of the writ, unless there is an actual levy,⁶⁵ and, where no levy is made before the return of the writ, personalty not levied on before such return may be subjected to the lien of a junior execution.⁶⁶ Under some statutes, however, except in certain specified cases, the lien of an execution continues after the return day.⁶⁷

At common law, and unless otherwise provided by statute, the lien may be continued, or, rather, an uninterrupted succession of liens may be kept up, by delivering a new execution into the hands of the sheriff at the same time that the former writ is returned.⁶⁸ Any interval during which no execution is outstanding interrupts the continuity of the lien.⁶⁹ Under the various statutes particular methods have been prescribed for preserving and continuing the lien of an execution.⁷⁰ Under some statutes the lien of the original execution may be continued so as to preserve its priority by the issuance of successive writs at the time and in the manner prescribed, in default of which such lien terminates on return of the writ and junior liens or claims which have attached acquire priority.⁷¹

After return day where property levied on. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the title vested in an officer by virtue of his levy of a writ of execution remains until divested by subsequent proceedings, and he may proceed to advertise and sell the property after the return day of the writ by virtue of his title acquired by an antecedent levy.⁷² A mere demand of payment is not a substitute for a levy and does not preserve the lien.⁷³ The time during which this lien acquired by the levy remains in force is usually a matter of statutory regulation.⁷⁴

Effect of expiration of judgment lien. In accordance with the rule that an execution neither extends the lien of the judgment on real estate nor creates a new lien on the property, see supra § 123, it is generally held that the lien or priority of an execution as against realty expires with the lien of the judgment.⁷⁵ Under some statutes, however, an execution issued or levied within the term of the judgment lien preserves or continues the lien, or creates a lien, until the execution of the writ or such other time as may be designated in the statute.⁷⁶ Since a judgment does not lose its lien by being opened, a levy previously made on an execution outstanding also retains its lien after the judgment on which it

§ 132. Loss or Suspension

As a general rule an execution lien cannot be lost without some fault on the part of the execution creditor.

The general rule is that when the lien of an execution has once attached to the property of defendant it cannot be lost without some fault on the part of plaintiff or some act with which he is chargeable.⁷⁸ In other words, a neglect or dereliction of duty on the part of the officer subsequent to the levy of the writ, to which the judgment creditor is not a party, will not invalidate the levy or destroy the lien.⁷⁹ In some cases, however, it has been held that if an officer elects to relinquish a levy, or if by any act of his it is in effect relinquished, it is discharged beyond reclamation, and the remedy of the judgment creditor is then against the officer on his official bond.⁸⁰

§ 133. — Abandonment or Release of Levy

An execution lien may be lost by an abandonment or release of the levy.

A plaintiff in execution may waive the benefit of a levy under his writ, and abandon the lien thereby acquired,⁸¹ but such abandonment must be distinctly and clearly proved⁸² by showing acts of plaintiff clearly evincing an intention to abandon, or omissions of such a nature as to amount to an abandonment.⁸³ Under a statute providing that an unexplained dismissal of a levy on personal property sufficient to pay the debt is an abandonment of the lien so far as third persons are concerned, the mere fact of dismissal of the levy by plaintiff when shown to be unproductive does not destroy the lien.⁸⁴

§ 134. — Death of Party

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the lien of an execution is generally not suspended or lost by the subsequent death of either the judgment creditor or the judgment debtor.

Since the writ is deemed to be in process of execution from its teste at common law, and from its delivery to the officer under statutes where the common-law fiction of relation to the day of the teste has been abolished, see supra § 124, in the absence of express statutory provision, a writ of execution in the hands of an officer is not abated by the death of the judgment creditor, and it is the duty of the officer to proceed to execute the writ against the personal or real property of defendant notwithstanding the death of the judgment creditor, no scire facias or other revival being necessary, and the lien of the execution continues.⁸⁵ However, in several jurisdictions it has been held that, where a personal judgment is taken and plaintiff dies before the levy of an execution, the action must be revived in the name of the personal representative of such plaintiff before the writ can be executed.⁸⁶

Judgment debtor. If no execution lien has been obtained prior to the death of the judgment debtor, the property cannot be sold under the writ.⁸⁷ In the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁸⁸ the lien of an execution, when it once attaches, is not lost by the subsequent death of the judgment debtor, nor need proceedings be taken to revive the judgment, but the officer may proceed to sell, or levy and sell.⁸⁹ However, in some states a revival of the judgment is necessary.⁹⁰ It has also been held, sometimes by virtue of statute, that death before a levy precludes further execution of the writ,⁹¹ although the lien obtained by a valid levy may be enforced by sale after the death of the execution debtor.⁹² In the absence of a statute to the contrary, in case of a judgment against plural defendants, of whom one or some may be dead, the sheriff may levy an execution on the goods of a surviving defendant without plaintiff being required to revive his judgment against the heirs or representatives of the deceased defendants.⁹³

§ 135. — Delay in Executing Writ

Delay in executing a writ of execution may cause a loss or suspension of the lien, at least as to intervening rights of third persons.

Since the only proper use of an execution is to enforce the collection of a debt and to enforce it with a considerable degree of diligence,⁹⁴ an attempt to make use of it for purposes of security merely, or to shield the property of the debtor from seizure by other creditors, is a perversion of the writ, and will postpone it to other executions subsequently issued.⁹⁵ Hence, if plaintiff delivers an execution to the sheriff with a direction not to levy at all, or until further orders, or to levy and hold without sale, or if similar orders are given after delivery or after the levy, it creates no lien on defendant's property as against a creditor issuing and proceeding with a subsequent execution,⁹⁶ or as against bona fide purchasers or other lienholders,⁹⁷ although under some statutes the rule has been limited to creditors as distinguished from purchasers.⁹⁸ As against defendant in execution and all others not acquiring rights or liens, however, the mere suspension of the execution will not affect the lien.⁹⁹ The general rule has been held not applicable to real estate on which the judgment is an independent lien.¹ A short statute of limitations has been enacted in some states for the protection of bona fide purchasers against dormant executions.²

What constitutes a direction not to proceed such as will terminate the lien depends on the circumstances of the particular case.³ There need not be express instructions not to proceed but there may be such a course of conduct as will have the same effect.⁴ A mere failure, neglect, or refusal, on the part of plaintiff, to give directions as to the manner or time of executing the writ does not constitute such interference with its execution as will have the effect of rendering it dormant.⁵ Likewise a failure to put the sheriff in funds to secure his sales fee is not equivalent to a direction not to execute the writ, where a statute makes sheriffs responsible to counties for all fees and costs of executing writs and enables them to exact prepayment for their personal protection.⁶ Of course, if the creditor instructs the officer to delay but he refuses or neglects to comply, the lien is not lost.⁷ The owner of two judgments, one the first and the other the last lien, where personalty has been levied on under execution issued on both judgments and left in possession of defendant, may stay the first and release its levy, and secure the last, without postponement of so much of the first judgment as is realized on the second to an intermediate lien creditor.⁸

Where an execution creditor has once lost his priority of lien by a perversion of the writ, he cannot, by thereafter giving the officer instructions to execute the writ in good faith, regain his original lien as against other executions which have acquired liens while his writ was stayed.⁹ In the absence of any intervening rights or liens, however, a direction to the sheriff to proceed with the sale has the effect of reviving the rights obtained by the original levy, that is to say, of reviving not the lien, but the priority of the lien as against all other liens and rights acquired after such direction.¹⁰

Delay in selling. The lien acquired by a levy under an execution, like any other right, may be lost, at least as to third persons, through the laches of the execution creditor in neglecting to enforce his execution by a sale within a reasonable time.¹¹ It has been held, however, that since the adoption of a lis pendens statute, that delay in selling under an execution does not amount to an abandonment of the lien.¹²

Delay not attributable to execution creditor. An execution which is delayed by no fault or direction of the judgment creditor will not be postponed as being fraudulent as against a junior execution or claim.¹³ An execution plaintiff does not lose the benefit of his lien by mere acquiescence in the delay of the officer to whom the process has been intrusted; but, in order for such delay to have this effect, it must appear that it resulted from the instructions of plaintiff in execution, or his attorney.¹⁴ However, acquiescence, where the delay continues for an unreasonable length of time, is sometimes held to render the writ dormant.¹⁵ Where a junior creditor consents to the delay, the first writ does not lose its priority.¹⁶

some jurisdictions, although the creditor had no actual fraudulent intent;¹⁷ but in other jurisdictions it has been held that, where an execution is stayed by order of the judgment creditor, this of itself is no evidence of fraud, and that there must be some proof of actual fraud, or intention to hinder and delay other creditors, in order to subject a senior execution to postponement.¹⁸

Perversion of prior writs. When an alias or pluries writ of execution is issued in good faith to be executed, its lien from its teste or delivery, as the case may be, is not postponed on account of a perversion of the original writ on which it is based, or any intermediate writ.¹⁹

What delay permissible. An execution cannot be considered dormant or fraudulent merely because the execution creditor seeks to make the most of the goods levied on, although some delay is caused thereby, in consequence of postponing the sale to avoid sacrificing the property.²⁰ It is not necessary that a creditor, in order to preserve the priority of his lien, should at once proceed to push his debtor to the wall, and he may, without losing his priority, if he acts in good faith, grant the debtor a reasonable indulgence to allow him to save his goods from sacrifice,²¹ or to avoid subjecting his family to unnecessary inconvenience or annoyance,²² as by not interfering with his possession of his goods for a reasonable time.²³ Beyond the statement that a reasonable delay will not affect the lien,²⁴ unless coupled with an intent to waive or abandon it,²⁵ or with an intent to defraud,²⁶ it is impossible to lay down any fixed rule as to how long a delay will extinguish the lien, and each case must be governed by its own circumstances; a delay which would be unreasonable in one case, on account of the parties, or the subject matter of the levy, might under other circumstances, be entirely reasonable and proper.²⁷ Where the levy has been filed or recorded pursuant to statute, considerable delay thereafter in making a sale has been permitted without defeating priority of lien.²⁸ The reasonableness of the delay under the particular circumstances is a question for the jury.²⁹

§ 136. — Payment or Satisfaction of Judgment, or Arrest of Debtor under Execution against the Person

An execution lien may be lost by payment or satisfaction of the judgment on which it is issued, or by the arrest of the judgment debtor under an execution against the person.

The lien of an execution is absolutely extinguished by a full satisfaction of the judgment, decree, or order on which the writ is based,³⁰ such as by payment³¹ or tender of payment.³² So it is generally considered that, when a levy is made on particular property of the execution debtor, the general lien on all his property is merged, or transmuted into a special lien on the property seized,³³ and the balance of his property is, as to junior creditors or bona fide purchasers, relieved from the encumbrance.³⁴ This rule, however, is not universal.³⁵ ad satisfaciendum. An execution will lose its lien on the property of defendant, if his body is taken under a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum sued out by the execution creditor, since the debtor's arrest under such process is prima facie a satisfaction of the debt.³⁶

§ 137. — Other Acts or Omissions Destroying or Suspending Lien

Various acts or omissions other than those which have previously been specifically considered may, under the circumstances of particular cases, have the effect of destroying or suspending an execution.

After the levy of an execution, a resort to other remedies,³⁷ such as filing a creditor's bill,³⁸ or filing claim against the estate of a deceased debtor,³⁹ or claiming as a general creditor under an assignment for the benefit of creditors,⁴⁰ is not a waiver or abandonment of the lien or levy; but the lien may be waived by pursuing an inconsistent remedy, as by filing a petition in bankruptcy.⁴¹

Leaving property in possession of defendant. The general rule is that leaving defendant in possession of personal property after a levy does not destroy the execution lien or constitute an abandonment of the levy, since this is not sufficient to establish fraud in the use of the writ.⁴² Where, however, the property is allowed to remain in the possession of the debtor, particularly where the circumstances indicate that the execution lien was being used for purposes of security, see supra § 135, the lien may be lost or postponed as to subsequent levies or persons who in good faith acquire rights in the property.⁴³ If the sale is delayed, and the debtor is allowed to continue in possession for an unreasonable time,⁴⁴ by the direction or consent of the creditor,⁴⁵ the lien is lost. Another view is that if the goods are left in defendant's possession for an unusual or unreasonable time, and he is permitted to use and enjoy them as before the levy, these facts will amount to evidence, more or less strong according to circumstances, that the execution is kept on foot for fraudulent purposes, but they will not per se postpone the execution in favor of a junior writ,⁴⁶ although a bona fide purchaser from defendant will be protected.⁴⁷ The lien may be lost where the creditor permits the debtor to remove the goods to another county or precinct.⁴⁸

Removal of property. It has been held that an officer forfeits any lien he may have on property levied on by allowing it to be taken out of the state.⁴⁹ If an execution is regularly kept alive, its lien on goods of defendant which have become subject thereto is not lost, but is merely suspended, by reason of the goods being carried beyond the limits of the county,⁵⁰ and the lien revives immediately, and relates back to the time when it first attached, upon the property being brought back within the county, whether by the execution debtor or by a purchaser from him.⁵¹ This rule applies to property which has been removed beyond the limits of the state,⁵² unless the statute of limitations of the state to which it was removed has perfected the title of a purchaser.⁵³ There are decisions to the effect that the lien follows the property to another county to which it is removed, and binds it while in such county.⁵⁴

execution by the officer after levy without sale is a surrender of his authority, and leaves such property as free from his control as though no levy had been made on it.⁵⁵ In some states such a return does not operate as a discharge of the lien;⁵⁶ where part of the property taken under execution is improperly levied on, a direction by the judgment creditor to the officer not to sell such property does not constitute an abandonment of the levy as to the other property rightfully taken.⁵⁷ A return that the property was not sold for want of bidders does not discharge the lien.⁵⁸ As to land which the execution debtor had fraudulently conveyed to avoid paying the judgment, it has been held that the execution lien was not lost by a return by the sheriff, without sale, stating that he had levied on the debtor's right, title, and interest in such property and also that the execution was wholly unpaid and unsatisfied.⁵⁹ It has been held that a return of the writ, unsatisfied, by the sheriff, where neither a copy of the writ nor an alias or alternative writ was retained by him, releases such seizure as has been made by him, and that any lien the seizing creditor may have had as a result of such seizure is lost.⁶⁰ Under a statute providing that where goods and chattels levied on by execution cannot be sold for want of bidders, or want of time, the officer making the return shall attach a true and perfect inventory of the goods and chattels remaining unsold, a judgment creditor does not lose his execution lien on items of property remaining unsold which are omitted from the inventory.⁶¹

Issuing alias or other writs. The general rule is that the issuance of a second writ of execution before the return of that under which a levy has been made, while irregular, does not necessarily amount to an abandonment of the levy, even though the same property is again seized under the second writ.⁶² The issuance of a second writ prior to the return or satisfaction of the first one may be evidence tending to show an abandonment of the former, but it is not usually regarded as conclusive, and may be overcome by evidence showing the contrary;⁶³ but it has been held that where plaintiff, after the levy of his writ, abandons it and sues out an alias writ, the benefit of the first levy is lost.⁶⁴ So there may be an abandonment of the first levy if the second writ is levied on different property.⁶⁵

Reversal or vacation of judgment. Where the judgment under which the execution was issued and the levy made is reversed or vacated, the lien created by the levy of the execution is extinguished.⁶⁶

Setting off property as exempt. Where property seized under execution is claimed by an execution debtor as exempt, and it is set off to him by the officer, it is relieved from the lien of the execution.⁶⁷

Dissolution of attachment does not destroy the lien created by a levy of execution on the attached property.⁶⁸

Judicial stay or release. The general rule is that an execution does not lose any lien acquired at the time of its issuance by being subsequently suspended in its operation by a judicial stay. On the dissolution thereof, such execution is entitled to priority over junior executions whose liens have attached to the property of the judgment debtor in the interim.⁶⁹ Under the practice in some jurisdictions on the opening of the judgment on which the writ is issued, on petition for a rule to obtain such relief, the court may release the lien of the execution on the giving of security to secure judgment, interest, and costs.⁷⁰

VI. STAY, QUASHING, VACATION, AND RELIEF AGAINST EXECUTION

§ 139. Stay of Execution

- a. In general
- b. Stay in furtherance of justice
- c. Stay on furnishing or possessing security
- d. Length of stay
- e. Persons entitled to seek or oppose stay; waiver
- f. Application and proceedings

a. In General

A stay of execution is the stopping or arresting of execution on a judgment, or of the creditor's right to issue execution, for a limited period; it can be effected only by legal proceedings for that purpose, and cannot be substituted for a proper legal remedy.

A stay of execution has been defined as the stopping or arresting of execution on a judgment, that is, of the judgment creditor's right to issue execution, for a limited period,⁷¹ although in practice the phrase is also used to denote a term during which no execution can issue on a judgment.⁷²

Since the right to an execution on a judgment is a substantial right, see § 14 supra, it can be taken away or suspended only by some legal proceeding for that purpose.⁷³ Where there is no statutory stay, and no stay granted on motion or otherwise, the pendency of other actions or proceedings do not of themselves stay execution.⁷⁴ Similarly, since the writ of execution is in many jurisdictions statutory, see § 1 supra, the power of a court to suspend or withhold execution on a judgment has been held to depend solely on statute;⁷⁵ and in order that a stay be warranted the requirements of the statute must be met.⁷⁶

As substitute for other remedies. A stay cannot be substituted for a proper legal remedy, such as an appeal,⁷⁷ audita querela,⁷⁸ action at law,⁷⁹ or bill in equity.⁸⁰ porarily to stay execution on its judgments whenever it is necessary to accomplish the ends of justice.

As stated in Corpus Juris, which has been quoted and cited with approval, all courts of law, under statutes or under their general supervisory powers over their process, have the power temporarily to stay execution on judgments by them rendered whenever it is necessary to accomplish the ends of justice.⁸¹ A judge in chambers also has this power, since the authority which a judge in chambers exercises over process of the court in a case pending is usually that of the court itself.⁸² The judgment itself may contain a stay of execution⁸³ which may be conditional.⁸⁴ The court in an equity suit has power to make provisions for the time when the judgment is to be carried into effect.⁸⁵ If a judgment has been set aside, there can be no stay of execution because there is no execution.⁸⁶

Postponement of sales. The power of the courts to postpone the enforcement of a judgment by sale has been held to be limited to cases where the sale would sacrifice the debtor's interest and the postponement would not prejudice the creditor,⁸⁷ and to cases where the power is conferred by statute.⁸⁸

(2) Grounds

A stay of execution may be granted when it would be unjust to permit execution of the judgment, as where there are equitable grounds for a stay, there has been a garnishment of the debtor, or where certain other proceedings are pending.

A stay in furtherance of justice, under or apart from statute, may be granted whenever it would be unjust to further execute or enforce the judgment,⁸⁹ or where, although it is proper to enforce the judgment, there is good reason why execution should be postponed.⁹⁰ However, the ground of relief must rest either on facts occurring subsequent to the decree or judgment, or on antecedent facts which show fraud in its rendition, or want of jurisdiction of the court apparent on the record.⁹¹ Thus a stay cannot be granted because of matters which would have constituted a defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered,⁹² or which could have been, or were, urged and considered on the trial.⁹³

Stays have been held proper where specially authorized by statute,⁹⁴ or where the execution is improper, unfair, or unnecessary.⁹⁵ Thus stays have been held proper when an execution is unauthorized by the judgment⁹⁶ or has been improvidently issued,⁹⁷ where the judgment has been satisfied,⁹⁸ where the execution is unwarranted against the person complaining,⁹⁹ or where the parties made a valid agreement for a stay of execution.¹

On the other hand, it has been held that a stay is not warranted by the fact that the goods levied on, in the debtor's possession, belonged to another,² that the land on which the levy was made is in the adverse possession of another claiming under a paramount title³ or had been assigned for the benefit of creditors,⁴ that defendant is temporarily absent from the jurisdiction,⁵ or that the execution has been levied on exempt property,⁶ although on the last point there is also some authority to the contrary.⁷

After appeal and affirmance a stay may not be granted because of matters appearing in the record and concluded by the appeal;⁸ and this rule precludes a stay on the ground that the judgment was not authorized by the verdict.⁹ That one of two joint tort-feasors was insolvent is not a ground for staying execution on the judgment against the other tort-feasor or his surety.¹⁰

Equitable grounds. A stay is frequently allowed on grounds which are in their nature peculiarly equitable, as, for instance, to give defendant opportunity to set off a claim against plaintiff,¹¹ or to permit the filing of an equitable defense,¹² although a stay is not proper because of a mere pos-

Vested rights

Where rights have vested or been acquired in good faith under a decree which has become final, courts generally refuse to stay or withhold execution.—Pottinger v. Pottinger, 182 So. 762, 133 Fla. 442.

Noncompliance with court rule

A defendant was entitled to stay an execution issued on a judgment in action for injuries, which was obtained in absence and without knowledge of, or negligence of, counsel for defendant, and without compliance with court rule providing that either plaintiff or defendant may at least fifteen days before commencement of term of court serve on opposing party a written notice that case is ready for trial and will be placed on trial calendar at next term, and that if such notice is filed clerk shall enter case on trial docket.—National Trucking Co. v. sibility that the debtor may acquire a claim which may be set off.¹³ The stay on this ground is all the more just when plaintiff is insolvent;¹⁴ but, if plaintiff on his part furnishes security to the amount of the execution, there is then no reason for the stay.¹⁵ A stay has been granted to prevent fraud or great injustice,¹⁶ to avoid crippling a quasi-public corporation,¹⁷ or to save the expense of numerous sales to satisfy different liens on the same property, or to determine the equities of numerous parties in a complex situation by one suit in chancery.¹⁸ A stay will not be granted, however, if justice can be done without it.¹⁹

Garnishment of judgment debtor. The fact that the debtor has been garnished at the suit of a third person is quite generally held to be good ground for a stay.²⁰ However, the granting of a stay on this ground is discretionary,²¹ and should be denied if the garnishment is the result of collusion between the debtor and the garnishing creditor.²² In some jurisdictions, as in Pennsylvania, if attachment execution is served on defendant by creditors of plaintiff, the practice is to rule the sheriff to pay the proceeds of the execution into court and then refer the matter to an auditor to determine the respective rights of the parties.²³ In other jurisdictions the garnished defendant has the right to require the claimants to interplead, and it is improper to stay execution until the garnishment suit is disposed of.²⁴

The garnishment of the debt in another state has been held sufficient ground for a stay until the garnishee is released from the garnishment;²⁵ but in accordance with the general rule that the garnishment of a judgment debt by process from a court of different jurisdiction will not be permitted, see the C.J.S. title Garnishment § 94, also 28 C.J. p 143 note 41—p 144 note 55, it has also been held that a motion to stay execution in such a case will be overruled.²⁶

Pendency of other proceedings. The mere pendency of another action or proceeding is not necessarily a ground for a stay.²⁷ However, an execution will ordinarily be stayed pending the termination of other proceedings connected with the principal case,²⁸ or of a motion to quash or vacate the writ,²⁹ where grounds for the stay are shown,³⁰ or a motion to vacate the judgment.³¹ It is proper to stay execution pending a certiorari to determine the validity of the judgment,³² or until an application can be made to vacate the proceedings of the officer under an execution irregularly and informally issued,³³ or pending a replevin suit relating to the property levied on.³⁴ So it has been held proper to stay execution until the return of the service of the writ is amended.³⁵

While an execution may be stayed by the taking of various steps to have the judgment reversed or set aside, execution may not be stayed where the unsuccessful party is merely contemplating the taking of such steps.³⁶

a. Stay on Furnishing or Possessing Security

(1) In general

(2) Freeholder defendant

(1) In General

Under various statutes a stay is authorized by the deposit of security as specified.

Under some statutes a stay of execution is authorized on defendant's furnishing sufficient security.³⁷ Under other statutes a stay of execution is authorized on tendering the interest and costs.³⁸ Where authorized by statute, the debtor may execute a bond called a replevin bond, to suspend a levy or a sale of property levied on;³⁹ and the judgment is extinguished by such bond and all further proceedings must be on the bond in which the judgment is merged.⁴⁰ In any event, where the debtor claims a statutory stay by filing a security bond, he must bring himself strictly within the statute granting it.⁴¹ If a successful appellee

takes, instead of an affirmance, a new and original judgment in the appellate court, he is subject to all the statutory rights to a stay which attach to original judgments in other courts.⁴²

Matters relating to the necessity and sufficiency of security, liability thereon, and proceedings to enforce such liability are considered infra § 140.

(2) Freeholder Defendant

Under statutes a stay is allowed in certain cases if the debtor is possessed of a freehold sufficient to secure the creditor. The statutory requirements must be met, and the proper procedure followed.

In some jurisdictions a stay of a definite length of time on money judgments is allowed the judgment debtor if he possesses a freehold of sufficient value to secure the creditor.⁴³ To justify a plea of freehold to an execution, the property must be unencumbered.⁴⁴ Since the stay is granted on the ground of security rather than of privilege, it will be allowed to all judgment defendants on the application of one of them who as a freeholder is entitled to it.⁴⁵ A defendant who has defaulted is also entitled to the stay.⁴⁶ The statute applies in favor of a corporation defendant as well as an individual;⁴⁷ but it does not apply in favor of counties or townships,⁴⁸ or against the state.⁴⁹

Under such a statute which provides for a freehold stay in actions instituted by writ for the recovery of money due by contract or for damages arising from a breach of contract, no stay can be had where the damages arise from the exercise of the right of eminent domain,⁵⁰ or where the land is specially charged with the judgment on which the execution sought to be stayed is issued,⁵¹ or where the judgment has been rendered against defendant in scire facias on a recognizance bail;⁵² and defendant has been held not entitled to a stay in an action upon an administration bond.⁵³

Procedure in claiming stay. While it has been held that it is not necessary for a defendant to file a plea of freehold and to justify it, although it is the usual practice,⁵⁴ it has also been held that this privilege must be claimed.⁵⁵ The fact of defendant's being a freeholder should appear from the record;⁵⁶ but defendant need not show title as in ejectment, possession under color of title being sufficient.⁵⁷ If the estate of freehold is in the county where the plea is filed, defendant need show only the existence and value of the freehold, and it then rests on plaintiff to show an encumbrance, if he makes an objection to the plea on that ground.⁵⁸ If the freehold is in another county, defendant must not only show its existence and value, but must produce evidence, by the usual certificates of search, of its being clear from encumbrances,⁵⁹ and plaintiff may examine defendant, on oath, on the subject of the alleged freehold.⁶⁰ The court may pronounce on the value from an inspection of the title papers merely, or, at its discretion, may order additional evidence on that subject to be taken.⁶¹

Procedure in opposing stay. After the plea of freehold has been filed plaintiff may move to dismiss it for insufficiency,⁶² or may make oath against it.⁶³ It is then a question for the court to decide whether defendant is a freeholder, so as to entitle him to the benefit of the statute,⁶⁴ and the decision of the court is not reviewable by the supreme court.⁶⁵

Effect of claiming privilege. After the plea has been filed plaintiff may issue execution, but only at his peril.⁶⁶

d. Length of Stay

Statutes governing the length of the stay are controlling; a perpetual stay may be granted in a proper case.

The length of the stay, where governed by statute, depends on the statute which confers the right to it,⁶⁷ and the stayer cannot consent to a shorter time.⁶⁸ Where the stay is granted on motion it should be within the limits allowed by statute;⁶⁹ and it has been held that it should not be for any given number of days but should be limited by the time when the party can make application for the relief he asks.⁷⁰ Successive stays are sometimes not allowed,⁷¹ at least unless notice is given.⁷²

Perpetual stay. The power of the court to stay execution in the interest of justice has been exercised even to the extent of giving relief by a perpetual stay, when it was clear that it was just so to do,⁷³ as where a discharge in bankruptcy⁷⁴ or insolvency⁷⁵ was obtained too late to be pleaded, where the execution was issued on a void judgment,⁷⁶ where the judgment was obtained by fraud, mistake, and surprise,⁷⁷ where judgment was awarded against plaintiff in a suit prosecuted in his name but without his authority,⁷⁸ or where the judgment has been satisfied.⁷⁹ rules governing the reckoning of time generally, see the C.J.S. title Time § 13, also 62 C.J. p 987 note 22—p 990 note 47, when the time of the stay is reckoned from a certain day, that day should be excluded;⁸⁰ but if from an act done, the day on which it is done must be included.⁸¹ Where a statute provides that a stay authorized by it is to be reckoned from the return day of the original process, the reckoning should begin from the return day of the first original process which was effective in bringing defendant into court.⁸² In some jurisdictions a stay is reckoned from the rendition⁸³ or entry⁸⁴ of the judgment. In others the stay operates from the time the bond is filed.⁸⁵

e. Persons Entitled to Seek or Oppose Stay; Waiver

Generally only parties can apply for a stay of execution; the right to a stay may be waived.

Generally no one but a party can apply for a stay.⁸⁶ However, a partial stay has been ordered in behalf of bona fide purchasers where the lien of the judgment had ceased by lapse of time.⁸⁷ It has been held that a stranger in the case is not entitled to a stay where the statutory requirements are not complied with.⁸⁸

A statute providing that wage earners' claims shall be preferred and first paid out of the proceeds of sale gives holders of such claims no right to object to the staying of execution issued on a judgment obtained by another person against their debt-or.⁸⁹

Waiver of right to stay. The right of a party to a stay of execution may be lost by acts or omissions which constitute a waiver of the right,⁹⁰ although a waiver will not be readily implied.⁹¹ An intended waiver of a stay is not affected by a statute which gives a stay of execution on contracts waiving it, since such a statutory provision is unconstitutional.⁹² On the other hand it has been held that, where there is no statute authorizing a judgment without stay of execution, an agreement of the maker of a note to pay it without relief from the stay laws does not authorize a judgment of that character.⁹³

f. Application and Proceedings

A motion or application, on notice to the opposite party, is the proper procedure to obtain a stay of execution. Generally the court which would or did issue the execution has jurisdiction of the motion. The granting of the motion rests in the court's discretion.

A motion or application to the court or judge,⁹⁴ with the requisite notice thereof to the opposite party,⁹⁵ is the proper procedure to obtain a stay of execution. The application should be made promptly on discovering the facts,⁹⁶ and must be made within the period of time limited by statute.⁹⁷

The affidavit, petition, or other form of application should set forth the applicant's ground for relief with sufficient particularity.⁹⁸ The applicant must show facts to warrant the exercise of judicial discretion,⁹⁹ and the court will not stay summarily if the case is doubtful, but will leave the party to seek his remedy by action.¹

Jurisdiction to grant stay. Except in so far as the rule is changed by statutory provision,² only the court which rendered the judgment or issued the execution has jurisdiction to stay execution.³ Ordinarily a stay cannot be issued in another action brought for an entirely different purpose.⁴ However, a temporary stay may be granted by a federal district court,⁵ even where the execution was issued by a territorial court, if the necessity of the case requires it.⁶

Discretion of court. The granting of a stay usually rests in the discretion of the court⁷ which will not be reviewed unless capriciously exercised or abused.⁸

Matters considered or determined. In determining whether a stay should be allowed, consideration must be given to the equities of both plaintiffs and defendants.⁹ Questions of fact may not, it has been held, be determined on a motion for a stay of execution.¹⁰

Terms and conditions. Where a statute authorizes a stay on such terms as shall be just, it is in the discretion of the judge whether to impose any terms and as to what terms shall be imposed.¹¹ Where a motion is improperly denied, the error is not cured by the fact that the order is made without prejudice to an application after sale to have the proceeds paid into court and the rights of the parties then determined.¹²

ment.¹³ Where a judgment is payable by installments, provision may be made in the order as to future installments;¹⁴ and it has been considered good practice for an order temporarily staying execution to contain a stipulation that the lien remain.¹⁵ The stay, in a proper case, may be as to one only of the execution debtors;¹⁶ and where granted by a judge pro tempore until a case made is settled, it has reference to an effectual settlement made before the judge has lost jurisdiction.¹⁷ The stay may be by a military order.¹⁸

Service of the order should be made as directed in the order, where it contains such a direction.¹⁹ Showing it to the sheriff has been held sufficient to terminate his right to proceed further.²⁰

The order may be set aside in a proper case,²¹ on application to the court that made it.²² If plaintiff is prejudiced by a stay, his remedy is by application to the court which granted it for an order vacating or modifying the stay as the case may require; he has no remedy in equity.²³

§ 140. — Security

- a. In general
- b. Liability on bond and enforcement thereof

a. In General

Unless required by statute or order of court, security is unnecessary for a stay of execution. The security must comply substantially with the statute or order of court requiring it, must be approved by a proper officer, and must be filed within the specified time.

Unless required by statute,²⁴ the judge granting a stay need not require security as a condition,²⁵ although this is often done,²⁶ even where defendant is solvent,²⁷ and it is said to be the settled rule of equity to require security.²⁸

The furnishing or possessing of security as authorizing a stay of execution is considered in § 139 c supra.

Time for giving security. Where the statute specifies no time, the undertaking may be given at any time before execution of the judgment.²⁹ However, where the time is prescribed by law, the undertaking must be given within such time to operate as a statutory stay of execution,³⁰ although this rule does not prevent the execution from being stayed by agreement after the time fixed by statute.³¹ The requirement as to time may be waived by plaintiff.³²

Sufficiency of security. The security, to be sufficient, must substantially comply with the terms of the governing statute, or, in the absence of statute, with the terms of the order of the court.³³ It may not be necessary, however, to comply with all the provisions of the statute, since some may be merely directory.³⁴ Additional security may be required, under statutes in some states, where the creditor deems his debt in danger from the insolvency of the stayor.³⁵

Under a general power of amendment given by statute, a debtor who has in good faith filed a bond, which has been approved by the proper officer, but is subsequently discovered to be insufficient in law, may amend it to conform to the law so that he may have the stay.³⁶ Moreover, where the statute so provides, the debtor has the right to substitute a new bond;³⁷ and leave to do so has been granted even where the court has denied its power to amend.³⁸

Approval and filing. The statutes usually require that the security offered by defendant must be approved by some person or officer, such as the clerk³⁹ or the court in which the judgment was rendered or a judge thereof.⁴⁰ If the security is not approved as required by law the creditor may treat it as a nullity and issue execution.⁴¹ However, the creditor may waive the approval since it is for his benefit; and neither the debtor nor the security can take advantage of the want of it.⁴²

The undertaking need not be filed unless the statute requires it.⁴³

Effect of giving security. Under some statutes the mere giving of security operates ipso facto in some instances as a stay.⁴⁴ Under other statutes the bond, recognizance, or obligation given to obtain a stay has the effect and force of a judgment confessed in a court of record against the person or persons acknowledging the same and against their estates;⁴⁵ but it is not a judgment which under the constitution of the United States is entitled to "full faith and credit" in the courts of another state.⁴⁶ Entry of security to obtain a stay operates as a discharge of a recognizance in the nature of special bail.⁴⁷

Apart from statute, the judgment creditor's acceptance of security for payment of the judgment has been held to extend the debtor's time for payment.⁴⁸

b. Liability on Bond and Enforcement Thereof

- (1) In general
- (2) Defenses
- (3) Proceedings to enforce liability

(1) In General

The liability of a surety on a stay bond is governed by the terms of the bond. Authorities differ as to whether the creditor may proceed against the stayor without first proceeding against the principal; as between the stayor and a surety on the original obligation, the stayor is ordinarily entitled to have the surety proceeded against first.

A contract of suretyship on a stay bond imposes on the surety or stayor the single, simple, and unqualified obligation of paying the amount of the judgment which has been rendered against his principal in the event that his principal does not pay it within the prescribed time;⁴⁹ and the courts are careful not to hold the stayor liable for any more than his undertaking requires.⁵⁰ Where a defendant retains his property, under a statute, on giving bond for a stay of execution on condition that he will neither remove, secrete, assign, nor in any way dispose of it until plaintiff's demand shall have been satisfied, an assignment of the property to other creditors is a breach of the bond.⁵¹ The bond binds the property of the stayor from the date of its execution,⁵² or from the date of its approval, where approval is required.⁵³ Where the execution is superseded on account of some matter of discharge after judgment, the security of the petitioner for the supersedeas is bound only for the costs of the new proceeding.⁵⁴ A bond given to stay an execution of an order subsequently held void is without consideration and creates no liability.⁵⁵

Where a stay bond does not conform to the statutory requirements, and is therefore not binding and effective as a statutory undertaking, the stayor may, nevertheless, be bound on his undertaking as on a common law contract if it is supported by sufficient consideration.⁵⁶

Liability by estoppel. A person may be liable on a bond not signed by him or by his authority by estoppel resulting from his acquiescence;⁵⁷ but an acknowledgment of liability by a stayor is of no effect where made after the time when execution could be stayed.⁵⁸

Original surety as stayor. Where a surety on the original debt, or on a prior bond to secure such debt, signs a stay bond, his liability is that of a principal and not of a surety.⁵⁹

Rights and remedies of stayor. In some jurisdictions plaintiff may proceed against either principal or stayor or both at his option.⁶⁰ In other jurisdictions the stayor cannot be held liable until after the judgment debtor has been proceeded against,⁶¹ unless the property of the principal is not immediately subject to execution.⁶² However, mere delay in proceeding against the principal does not discharge the stayor, especially where he fails to make use of the statutory remedy afforded him in such a case.⁶³ As between the stayor on the bond and a surety on the original obligation, the

stayor is ordinarily entitled to have the surety proceeded against before he himself is held for his liability of stayor, provided the stay has not violated the contract of suretyship,⁶⁴ or the surety has raised no objection.⁶⁵ Where the owner of the judgment releases a levy on the original surety's property during the stay, the stayor is discharged.⁶⁶

If the stayor is obliged to discharge the judgment, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the judgment debtor,⁶⁷ except in so far as the rights of other creditors may be thereby affected.⁶⁸

(2) Defenses

General rules governing the termination and release of liability of sureties ordinarily apply in proceedings against sureties on stay bonds.

General rules governing the termination and release of liability of sureties, see the C.J.S. title Principal and Surety §§ 116-244, also 50 C.J. p 92 note 28-p 190 note 76, ordinarily apply in proceedings against sureties on stay bonds.⁶⁹ The sureties are discharged by any act or omission of the creditor which is injurious to them or inconsistent with their rights.⁷⁰ The sureties are released by an extension of time to the debtor,⁷¹ provided there is a consideration therefor,⁷² and a definite time fixed for the extension,⁷³ and by a refusal to accept an offer to pay the debt in full,⁷⁴ or a satisfaction of the original judgment,⁷⁵ provided it occurs after the execution of the bond.⁷⁶

On the other hand, the sureties are not released by revival of judgment against the principal by scire facias issued against him alone,⁷⁷ by lack of diligence on the part of the judgment creditor in not enforcing the execution,⁷⁸ or by neglect on the part of the officer to file the bond with the execution.⁷⁹ It is no defense that the original debtor had become a bankrupt within four months after the date of the rendition of the original judgment against him.⁸⁰ Conditions not mentioned in the bond are not a defense.⁸¹

Attack on instrument. The principal and the surety on the bond are estopped to deny the validity of the bond after they have received the benefit of it.⁸² Moreover, mere mistakes or immaterial omissions in a bond do not constitute a valid defense.⁸³ However, the failure of sureties on the bond to justify may be a defense;⁸⁴ and since a penalty and a condition are indispensable to constitute a recognizance, the plea of nul tiel record to an action on a recognizance lacking these requisites will be sustained.⁸⁵ Fraudulent representations inducing the stayor to sign the bond are a defense only where made by the judgment plaintiff or someone acting for him.⁸⁶

Attack on judgment and prior proceedings. The surety on a stay bond is estopped to deny that a valid judgment was in force at the time of the execution of the bond;⁸⁷ and as long as the judgment remains in force the stayor cannot go behind it in search of irregularities in the proceedings in order to be discharged from his liability.⁸⁸ Moreover, it has been held that the fact that the judgment has since been set aside is not a defense to an action on the bond given for the stay of execution on the judgment.⁸⁹ However, it has also been held that the fact that the execution is unauthorized by the judgment is a good defense.⁹⁰

(3) Proceedings to Enforce Liability

Liability on a stay bond may be enforced by action or motion depending on the local practice, although where the bond is, by statute, equivalent to a confession of judgment, execution may issue.

Plaintiff may enforce liability on the bond by action⁹¹ or motion,⁹² according to the practice in the particular jurisdiction. It is necessary only to file a copy of the recognizance.⁹³ Where the judgment is assigned after a bond is given, but the assignee is merely a nominal party acting for one of the judgment debtors, the assignee may sue thereon.⁹⁴

Issuance of execution on bond. In jurisdictions where, by statute, the bond is equivalent to a confession of judgment by the stayor for the amount of the judgment stayed, with interest and costs, see § 140 a supra, on the expiration of the stay, execution may issue against the stayor as well as against the original judgment debtor,⁹⁵ unless the bond fails to conform to the statute.⁹⁶ However, it has been held that while such a bond is in the nature of a confession of judgment, and for some purposes is so considered, yet strictly considered it is not so,⁹⁷ and if the stay is not for the whole judgment it is void and cannot be enforced by execution.⁹⁸ If the principal is dead, an execution may issue against the stayor alone on a suggestion made of the principal's death.⁹⁹ Scire facias may issue to obtain such an execution.¹

§ 141. — Effect of Stay

A stay of execution usually operates on all subsequent proceedings within the scope of the stay order; an execution cannot issue pending the stay. The authorities differ as to the right of defendant to dispose of his property pending the stay, and as to the effect of the stay on the levy or lien of the execution.

A stay usually operates on all subsequent proceedings,² within the purpose of the stay order.³ Thus a sale made after a stay has been effected is void;⁴ and a subsequent levy will be vacated on motion.⁵ However, the stay does not affect the binding force of the judgment itself,⁶ and it does not discharge the obligation.⁷

Other holdings with respect to the effect of a stay are that if the stay does not bind plaintiff, it does not bind the officer,⁸ and a stay by order of court prevents the execution from becoming dormant.⁹ Removal of the case to the supreme court does not affect the stay.¹⁰

The granting of a debt moratorium does not nullify a writ of fieri facias but merely suspends it during the moratorium period, which time is not to be computed in determining the expiration date of the writ.¹¹

Disposal of debtor's property. While some authorities hold that when a stay is granted it is assumed, or an order is implied, that the party granted the stay will do nothing to impair his financial responsibility and the rights of the other party,¹² there is also authority for the view that no such order is implied.¹³

On lien, levy, and priority. It is generally held that the levy and lien of an execution,¹⁴ and the right of the officer to hold possession of personal property levied on,¹⁵ are not affected by an order staying execution. Thus the writ does not lose its priority by a stay.¹⁶

In some jurisdictions, however, a stay of execution will release a levy theretofore made and free

Reason for rule

Stay of execution is granted defendant against whom judgment has been rendered to afford him an opportunity of arranging either to pay

judgment or to allow him sufficient time to determine what further proceedings he deems necessary to pursue to protect his rights, and litigant is not justified in making use of stay for purpose of disposing of his property in order to avoid satisfaction of judgment by levy under execution.—Fass & Wolper v. the property from any lien acquired thereby,¹⁷ and the officer should restore the property to the owner¹⁸ who may sell it to whom he pleases.¹⁹ Moreover, where the court, on the filing of a stay bond by defendant, orders the return of the property seized, the sheriff is justified in returning the property,²⁰ even though the filing of the bond would not have authorized such return,²¹ or the order directing its return.²²

In other jurisdictions a stay releases the levy so far as the levy being a satisfaction of the judgment is concerned.²³ According to the practice in some states a supersedeas bond destroys the effect of a levy on personalty, the bond being considered security for the debt;²⁴ but it is in no sense a merger of the original liability as it existed prior to the levy.²⁵

Where the court pursuant to statutory authorization extends the time within which the debtor may pay the debt, a sale of the levied property a reasonable time before the return day of the execution as extended is not invalid;²⁶ but such sale cannot affect the right of the debtor to satisfy the debt on the return day.²⁷

A stay of execution in the entry of the judgment suspends the running of the statute limiting the duration of the judgment lien until the expiration of the stay, even though the stay is longer than the period of limitation.²⁸ If the stay does not appear on the record, the time runs from the date of the judgment.²⁹

Validity of writ issued pending stay. An execution cannot be issued pending a stay of execution,³⁰

except where otherwise provided by statute, as in case of failure to furnish additional security as required by the court under statutory authority.³¹ In some jurisdictions an execution issued within the period of the stay is voidable,³² while in others it has been held void;³³ but there is a presumption that the writ was not issued while the stay was in effect.³⁴

Under proper circumstances exemplary damages may be recovered from plaintiff for the issuance of execution pending the stay;³⁵ but the recognition of defendant is 'not thereby discharged.³⁶ The fact that a surety gave bond to take advantage of the insolvent laws,³⁷ or that he died before the end of the stay and defendant did not furnish additional security,³⁸ is no reason for the issuing of execution before the end of the stay.

§ 142. Quashing Execution

A motion to quash an execution is equivalent to a motion to set aside or recall the writ. Tender of the amount of the judgment is not a condition precedent.

A motion to "quash" an execution has been said to be the same as one to "set aside" or "recall" the writ.³⁹

However, quashing the writ of execution is to be distinguished from setting aside or quashing the levy, return, and sale had thereunder,⁴⁰ considered respectively supra § 109, infra §§ 325 and 230-242.

Conditions precedent. A judgment debtor is not required to allow his property to be sacrificed under excessive or incorrect execution merely because he cannot tender the amount actually owing on the judgment.⁴¹

§ 143. — Grounds

- a. In general
- b. Want of authority to issue
- c. Attack on judgment
- d. Matters of defense to action
- e. Discharge or satisfaction of judgment
- f. Irregularities in writ generally
- g. Variance between judgment and writ
- h. Acts of officers

a. In General

Generally a writ of execution will be quashed if it has been improvidently or irregularly issued or if it would be illegal or inequitable to permit its further use.

To justify the quashing of a writ of execution there must, of course, be sufficient ground therefor.⁴² As a general proposition, the writ will be quashed or recalled if it would be illegal or inequitable to permit its further use or enforcement,⁴³ or whenever it is made to appear that it has been improvidently or irregularly issued, or that it is informal or defective in some matter of substance,⁴⁴ as, for instance, where it has been issued for or against the wrong party,⁴⁵ or against the wrong property,⁴⁶ or on a different judgment from the one in which the execution issued.⁴⁷ However, mere clerical errors or mistakes which have not resulted, and cannot result, in injury to the party complaining are not sufficient to justify the quashal of the writ, and the court in such instances will either deny the motion or allow an amendment where the writ is readily amendable and leave is asked to amend.⁴⁸

As a general rule the quashal of an execution presupposes the right of the party entitled to the execution to have it again issued.⁴⁹

As discussed infra § 144 a, if the court has improperly made an order directing execution to issue, it will on motion recall the execution, although the order is appealable.

*The garnishment of the execution defendant for the judgment debt has been held a sufficient ground.*⁵⁰

Violation of agreement as to issuance of execution is a ground for quashing it,⁵¹ but where, after reasonable time, the agreement has not been carried out on the part of defendant, a rule to set aside the writ will be discharged.⁵²

Removal of grounds. Where, on the hearing of a motion to quash a voidable execution, it appears that the matter which caused its original issuance to be erroneous or irregular has been removed, the court will deny the motion.⁵³

b. Want of Authority to Issue

Want of authority in its issuance is ground for quashing a writ of execution.

As a general rule, the writ may be quashed where it was issued without authority,⁵⁴ either stat-

Absence of notice of assignment of judgment

utory or decretal,⁵⁵ as where it is issued by a person who has no authority to issue it,⁵⁶ or where there is no order, decree, or judgment as a basis therefor,⁵⁷ or, as is discussed infra in subdivision c of this section, where the order, decree, or judgment is void, or where unauthorized by the judgment,⁵⁸ or in case of the failure to file a transcript of the judgment of the justice where execution is issued from a higher court.⁵⁹

That the execution has issued after appeal from the judgment has been duly taken and perfected is ground for quashing the writ.⁶⁰ So, where an appeal from the judgment has been taken and an undertaking given for a stay of proceedings, an execution issued upon the judgment may be set aside on motion.⁶¹ However, an order of execution will not be vacated merely because subsequently defendant filed an appeal bond which was approved.⁶²

If plaintiff and sheriff have been enjoined from executing the original fieri facias, an alias issued after the injunction will be quashed.⁶³ So an execution bearing teste after the death of plaintiff⁶⁴ or defendant,⁶⁵ where unauthorized, see supra § 65, will be set aside, as will an execution irregularly issued after the lapse of a year and a day without proceeding by scire facias to revive it, or where the time allowed for its issuance by statute has elapsed, and it has been issued in contravention of statute without any motion or other proceeding to revive the judgment.⁶⁶ Where, however, the writ has been issued under circumstances such that plaintiff would have been entitled to leave of the court to issue it if he had made a formal application, the court may in its discretion refuse to set aside the execution.⁶⁷

It is not a ground for quashal that a defendant corporation is in process of voluntary dissolution, no permanent receiver having been appointed, since the creditor is entitled to any benefits derived from an execution up to the time of the appointment of a permanent receiver.⁶⁸

Premature issuance of writ. It has frequently been held to be a ground for quashing the writ that it was issued prematurely or before the performance of acts required to be done before its issuance;⁶⁹ but an execution which has been prematurely issued will not be quashed on motion where it appears that nothing has been done except what, at the time of making the objection to the writ, is authorized.⁷⁰

c. Attack on Judgment

Mere errors or irregularities in the judgment or the proceedings leading up thereto do not ordinarily constitute a ground for quashing the execution on motion. The writ may be thus quashed if the judgment has been rendered without jurisdiction or is otherwise null and void.

Amendment of return on prior execution

Although better practice might dictate that sheriff's erroneous return on writ of fieri facias be corrected before another writ is issued, where new writ was issued and it was established contradictorily with debtor that creditor was entitled to it, issuance of new writ is not so irregular as to require that it be quashed.—Louisiana Western Lumber Co. v. Stanford, 156 So. 423, 180 La. 376.

Mere errors or irregularities in the judgment or the proceedings leading up thereto and which may and should be availed of on appeal or writ of error do not ordinarily constitute grounds for quashing the execution on motion.⁷¹ The jurisdiction not being questioned, and the judgment not having been reversed, vacated, or set aside, such a motion would constitute a collateral attack on it.⁷² It is, however, ground for quashing the writ that the judgment on which it was issued was rendered without jurisdiction or is otherwise absolutely null and void, the defendant in such case not being confined to a bill in equity for relief against the judgment.⁷³

Applying these rules, it is held that the rendition of a judgment for a greater amount than that to which plaintiff was entitled would not be a ground for quashing the execution.⁷⁴ So an objection that the declaration, petition, or complaint did not state a cause of action,⁷⁵ or an objection that there has been a mistake as to the parties,⁷⁶ or that the verdict is not responsive to the issue,⁷⁷ or that the judgment was not authorized by the verdict⁷⁸ cannot be made on a motion to quash.

Judgment transcribed from justice of the peace. Errors and irregularities in a justice's court which are not jurisdictional in their nature cannot be made a ground for a motion to quash an execution issued on the transcript of a judgment out of the court of record where the transcript was filed.⁷⁹ However, it is good ground for quashal that the proceeding before the justice was a nullity on account of lack of jurisdiction,⁸⁰ or that a condition precedent to the filing of the transcript in the court of record had not been fulfilled.⁸¹

d. Matters of Defense to Action

Matters of defense available at time of the trial of the action do not constitute grounds for quashing the execution.

An execution will not be vacated on account of any defense which could have been made at the time of the trial.⁸² This includes a plea of discharge in bankruptcy⁸³ or of a discharge as an

Want of, or defect in, service of summons

(1) Insufficiency of service of the summons is no ground to quash execution where defendant knew of action at time of judgment and made no defense.—Looney v. West Virginia Hardwood Co., 168 S.E. 138, 113 W.Va. 385.

(2) Want of service is no ground for quashing execution where the judgment was valid on its face, and it did not appear that defendant had any valid defense thereto.—Flowers v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 117 S.W. 547, 89 Ark. 506.

(3) Where a justice of the peace appoints a private person as special deputy for the service of summons, return of such person is not conclusive, but is merely prima facie evidence of fact of service, and is open to attack by motion to quash execution, after transcript has been filed in circuit court and execution issued thereon.—Jones v. Overall, 13 S.W.2d 581, 223 Mo.App. 266.

insolvent.⁸⁴ However, as discussed infra subdivision e of this section, if the discharge is not obtained until subsequent to the entry of judgment, a motion to quash is proper.

e. Discharge or Satisfaction of Judgment

The discharge or satisfaction of the judgment is generally ground for quashing the writ.

It is ground for quashing an execution that before it was issued the judgment which is relied on as authority for its issuance had been paid or otherwise satisfied.⁸⁵ So payment or satisfaction after the issuance of the writ is a ground for its quashal.⁸⁶

A mere tender of payment, however, will not authorize the court to quash the execution, unless the money is paid into court or the tender is otherwise made good;⁸⁷ nor will an attachment of money of defendant in the hands of a third person, where nothing is realized thereon,⁸⁸ or a deposit of money with the sheriff conditioned to abide the outcome of an action by the debtor against the execution plaintiff⁸⁹ furnish any ground to set aside the execution; and where an officer, without authority, receives depreciated currency in payment of the execution, the court will refuse to quash second writ.⁹⁰

Part payment. Where the judgment has been paid or satisfied in part, it is proper to quash or supersede the writ except as to the amount remaining due,⁹¹ but the quashal of the writ in its entirety is not authorized.⁹²

Discharge. A discharge of the judgment or judgment debtor as by a discharge in bankruptcy constitutes ground for quashing the execution.⁹³

f. Irregularities in Writ Generally

Defects or irregularities in the writ of execution rendering it void are grounds for quashing the writ, as are irregularities rendering the writ voidable if not subject to amendment.

Errors or defects in a writ of execution which render it void are available as grounds for quashing or setting aside the writ.⁹⁴ So omissions or irregularities which merely render the writ voidable also constitute grounds for quashing the writ.⁹⁵

Assignment of judgment

On motion by motor carrier to quash execution issued on judgment against carrier, which shipper had assigned to carrier's insurer "for value received," the inference arose that judgment was paid in money and hence trial court did not err in sustaining motion to quash on ground, as contended by insurer, that motion pleaded a payment of the judgment and that there was no proof of payment.—Schuchman v. Satisfaction as to one of judgment debtors

Where judgment creditor and assignee of judgment filed satisfactions thereof as to only one of two judgment debtors, in consideration of such debtor's payment of sum less than full amount of judgment, superior court erred in granting other debtor's motion to recall writ of execution levied on her realty and satisfy judgment as against her.—Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Duer, Cal.App., 117 P.2d 405.

Unjustified proviso

A rule to set aside a writ of fieri facias under the deficiency judgment act of July 2, 1937, 21 P.S. § 821a et seq. wherein the release of personal liability contained a proviso that the release was to be null and void should the act be declared unconstitutional, was made absolute and the writ was quashed. There is nothing in the act to justify such a safeguard to the execution plain-unless it is subject to amendment, as discussed supra § 82. Thus an unauthorized indorsement on an execution,⁹⁶ or the fact that it lacks a seal,⁹⁷ has been held not a ground for a motion to quash; but an execution issued with interest from the time of the judgment at a rate in excess of the statutory rate has been held subject to be set aside,⁹⁸ as has a writ not subscribed by the party issuing it or by his attorney, as required by statute.⁹⁹

For a consideration of the form and sufficiency of the writ of execution see supra §§ 69-84.

Irregularities in direction for return. Unless no direction for the return of the writ is required¹ the writ may be quashed for irregularities in the direction for its return,² as where it has been made returnable prematurely,³ or where, in violation of statute, a term intervenes between its teste and the return day.⁴

The fact that the execution runs against exempt property is not ground for quashing the writ, where the levy is limited to property not exempt.⁵ However it has been held proper to quash an execution when the property levied on was considered not subject to the lien of the execution.⁶

g. Variance between Judgment and Writ

An essential and prejudicial variance between the writ of execution and the judgment is a ground for quashing the writ; but this is not so ordinarily as to a variance which constitutes a mere irregularity which may and should be corrected by amendment.

The writ may be quashed where there is an essential and prejudicial variance between the judgment and the writ.⁷ In accord with the general rule, however, where there is only a clerical mistake, the execution will not be quashed, but amended so as to conform to the judgment,⁸ unless the variance is so great that the execution cannot be identified with the judgment, in which case it must be quashed.⁹

A variance between a judgment and the recital of it in the execution, which variance is immaterial and does not work any prejudice to the debtor, is not a ground for quashing the writ.¹⁰

Variance as to amount. It has frequently been held to be ground for quashing the writ that it does not correspond to the judgment in amount, especially if the amount named in the execution is excessive.¹¹ So it has been held that a writ may be set aside when issued for an amount less than the amount of the judgment.¹² More frequently, however, it is held that instead of setting aside the writ in its entirety, where it is more or less than the amount of the judgment, the court should quash it in part only and direct an amendment.¹³ So the fact that costs are erroneously taxed,¹⁴ or the failure of the writ to include deductions of credits,¹⁵ is held not to be ground for quashing the writ, although there are decisions to the contrary on the latter proposition.¹⁶

A variance as to the time from which interest is to be calculated has been held ground for quashing.¹⁷

Variance as to parties. Where the execution fails to follow the recitals and description of the parties in the judgment it may be a ground for quashing;¹⁸ so a variance as to the parties, so great as to preclude identification of the judgment, is fatal on motion to quash.¹⁹ However, so long as the writ can be identified with the judgment, a misrecital of the parties is not ground for quashing.²⁰ Thus, if the writ is issued against one only of a plurality of defendants, the error may be corrected by amendment.²¹ It has also been held that where an execution is issued against proper persons, and also against others, the additional names may be stricken out instead of quashing the writ,²² although in some decisions this has been held ground for quashing the writ.²³ Where a judgment is rendered in favor of a guardian, execution issuing in the name of the infant does not follow the judgment and may be quashed.²⁴

As to return. Designation in a writ of execution for possession of property of a particular place for delivery of the property, although the judgment contained no such designation, has been considered surplusage and no ground for quashing the execution, if the place of delivery was a reasonable and proper one.²⁵

h. Acts of Officers

The acts of the officer to whom the writ is directed do not ordinarily constitute a ground for quashing the writ.

While it has been said that the proceedings of the officer to whom the execution is directed are a proper subject of inquiry by the court on a motion to quash or recall the execution, see infra § 144, it is usually held that the court has no power to vacate an execution for acts of omission or commission on the part of such officer after the writ had duly come to his hands.²⁶ Hence a levy on property not subject to the execution is not ground for quashing the writ,²⁷ as where exempt land has been levied on or is about to be levied on,²⁸ or where the property levied on is claimed by a third person.²⁹

It is not a ground for quashal that there are other lands in the hands of purchasers from defendant after the judgment and liable to contribute to the payment of the debt.³⁰

Action treated as motion

An independent action to restrain levy and sale under execution issued on judgment against plaintiff and to have judgment canceled of record should have been treated as a motion in the original cause, to the end that the issues raised by the pleadings could be determined and the rights of the parties adjudicated.—Abernethy Land & Finance Co.

not by independent action,³² whether the application is by a party to the action or by a third person prejudicially affected.³³ However, such a motion has been said to be a new and original proceeding.³⁴ A motion to quash is a proper remedy, as well when the process is absolutely void,³⁵ as when it is merely voidable.³⁶

A motion is unnecessary after notice that execution has been withdrawn,³⁷ or after the writ has been returned and becomes functus officio.³⁸

The fact that the order granting the writ is appealable does not restrict an attack on it to an appeal or writ of review.³⁹

Matters arising after judgment and before issuance of writ. Where the matter of discharge of a judgment debtor is subsequent to the judgment, motion to quash is the proper remedy,⁴⁰ a remedy which very early in this country was substituted for audita querela,⁴¹ which remedy is discussed in the title Audita Querela. Thus where a discharge in bankruptcy or insolvency is not obtained until subsequent to the entry of judgment, a motion to quash is proper.⁴² In such case, however, it has been held that the court will give plaintiff an opportunity to show that the discharge was inoperative as against his debt,⁴³ and when necessary will direct an issue to try the facts, as discussed infra subdivision h of this section. In some cases the proper mode of testing the validity of such a discharge is said to be by suit on the judgment, and the question cannot be raised in opposition to a motion to quash.⁴⁴

b. Jurisdiction and Venue

The court out of which execution issued ordinarily has jurisdiction of the motion and is the court to which the motion should ordinarily be addressed.

As long as the court retains jurisdiction of the main case,⁴⁵ its jurisdiction to entertain a motion to quash an execution issuing therefrom is unquestioned, and has been maintained in numerous cases, since every court has the inherent power, for the advancement of justice, to correct the errors of ministerial officers and to control its own process.⁴⁶ This power of the court is essential to the admin-

In Tennessee certiorari is the proper process by which to bring the execution into court for the purpose of enabling defendant to make the motion to quash.—Barnes v. Robinson, 4 Yerg. 186.

Relief in equity

(1) A court of equity, authorized to issue execution on its decrees, has the same jurisdiction over the process as a court of law.—Snively v. Harkrader, 30 Gratt. 487, 71 Va. 487—23 C.J. p 535 note 25.

(2) However, it is not necessary or proper to go into equity if the va-

istration of justice, and is coequal with the common-law courts, and does not depend on statutory enactments.⁴⁷

No attempted levy or other effort on the part of the officer to execute the writ is essential to the court's jurisdiction.⁴⁸

Particular court. One court having no power to quash the executions of another court, see Courts § 496 b (3), a motion to quash should be addressed to the court out of which the writ issued.⁴⁹ However, the motion need not be made to the same department of the court which granted the order authorizing the issuance of the writ.⁵⁰

If an execution is issued to a county other than the one in which the judgment was rendered, the motion must be made in the county where the judgment was rendered.⁵¹

In some instances an appellate court may grant relief.⁵²

In vacation. Application to quash may be made to a judge in vacation under the practice in some jurisdictions.⁵³ Under some statutes, an application to the judge at chambers or in vacation may be made to stay proceedings until he can hear the motion to quash in term time.⁵⁴

On transcript of inferior court judgment. As discussed supra § 61, the judgment of an inferior court such as that of a justice of the peace transcribed to a court of record is usually deemed the judgment of the court where the transcript is filed to be enforced, and such court of record having power to quash executions issued after it acquired jurisdiction in cases where it is just and proper to do so.⁵⁵ It has been held, however, that the court of record is not absolutely bound by the transcript, but has the right to examine the proceedings to see whether the justice acted within his jurisdiction.⁵⁶

In some states, where a transcript of a judgment of a lower court is filed in a higher court and execution issued there, the lower court is the only one which can quash the execution,⁵⁷ while in others the motion to recall may be made, in some cases, before the clerk of the court.⁵⁸

c. Who May Move; Parties

Except as statutes provide otherwise, ordinarily none but parties to the principal action who are liable to be injured may move to quash the execution. The court may act on its own motion in the case of a void writ.

Unless and except as changed by statute,⁵⁹ or unless the judgment or writ be absolutely void on the face thereof,⁶⁰ it is the general rule that none but parties to the original or principal action who are liable to be injured can move the court to recall or quash an execution.⁶¹ This rule is, how-cation of the execution of a law court is all the relief asked.

Privy of party not stranger

(1) Holders of notes secured by deed of trust, who were strangers to suit to recover taxes on the land but were privies of former holder of the notes, which was a party to such suit, were not "strangers" to the judgment rendered in such suit, and hence they could maintain motion to quash execution obtained by assignee of the tax judgment.—State ex rel. Gilkison v. Andrews, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 695.

(2) A purchaser of the property under a former execution against the same defendant stands in privy of estate with the administrator of defendant and when the property is levied on is entitled to move that the execution be quashed.—Harrington v. O'Reilly, 17 Miss. 216, 48 Am. D. 704.

Representative of representative

Where an administrator who is sued dies before levy of execution, his administrator is not a party to the record nor in privy to the subject matter of the execution and should not be heard by motion to quash it.—Henderson v. Winchester, 31 Miss. 290.

ever, subject to the exception that third persons, who will necessarily be prejudiced by the enforcement of the writ, such as subsequent purchasers, lien holders, and execution or judgment creditors, may move.⁶² However, an execution prematurely issued will not necessarily be set aside at the instance of creditors,⁶³ and even the debtor cannot complain, in some cases, where in no way injured.⁶⁴

Where statute permits actions to be continued by original parties after transfer of their interest, a motion to quash may be made by one made a party to the original action as having an interest in the property involved, but subsequently parting with such interest by transfer to another,⁶⁵ particularly where the transferor in such case agreed to save the transferee harmless against the claim of the execution creditor.⁶⁶

A judgment debtor who is entitled to have an execution quashed because the judgment has been satisfied by a codebtor, although he has neglected to move to quash, may nevertheless on the same ground supersede and quash an execution issued on a judgment against a garnishee under that execution.⁶⁷

A bankrupt⁶⁸ or a corporation in voluntary dissolution⁶⁹ may sometimes move to quash a writ against his or its property.

Court's own motion. In the case of a writ utterly void as lacking in statutory or decretal authority, it is the duty of the court of its own motion to order quashal, regardless of how or by whom the essential invalidity of the writ is brought to the court's attention.⁷⁰ In such case an order to quash should issue regardless of whether or not the moving parties are qualified to urge the motion.⁷¹

Necessary and proper parties. While it has been held that where plaintiff in the writ does not make the motion, he is a necessary party defendant,⁷² it has also been held that a party to the original action parting with his interest is not a necessary party to the proceedings,⁷³ as where the original judgment creditor assigned his interest without recourse,⁷⁴ although his presence as a party is not harmful.⁷⁵

It seems that the officer to whom the execution is directed is not a necessary party defendant to the motion, although it is proper to make him a party.⁷⁶ It has been held, however, that the clerk of the court issuing the execution is not a proper party.⁷⁷

The attorney for the judgment creditor is not a party to the action and is improperly made the party to whom the rule or motion is directed.⁷⁸

d. Time

A motion to quash a writ of execution must ordinarily be made before the return thereon which renders it functus officio. Unreasonable delay, however, may bar the motion in the discretion of the court unless the writ is absolutely void and no harm results from the delay.

Although, as a general rule, courts have power to quash executions at any time,⁷⁹ before return term,⁸⁰ unless otherwise provided by statute,⁸¹ any considerable or unreasonable delay in moving to quash for an irregularity will be treated as a waiver of the irregularity and an irrevocable renunciation of the right to quash the writ,⁸² especially where a sale has been made under the execution and to set aside the writ would affect prejudicially innocent purchasers who have paid their money,⁸³ the reasonableness of the delay resting primarily in the sound discretion of the court.⁸⁴ Thus an execution on a dormant judgment cannot be set aside after property has been sold under it.⁸⁵ If, however, the writ is void, and no prejudice has resulted from the delay, laches is no defense.⁸⁶

A motion to quash on the ground that the writ was issued more than a year and a day after rendition of judgment is not barred by the lapse of the time for bringing writs of error⁸⁷ or certiorari,⁸⁸ or for interfering with or changing judgments.⁸⁹

Prior to levy. It has been held that a motion to quash an execution made before a levy thereunder was made or intended is premature.⁹⁰

After return. As discussed infra § 327, an execution which has performed its office and been returned into court becomes functus officio, and a motion to quash made thereafter will not lie.⁹¹ The proper remedy at this stage is to set aside the levy and return, and the sale, if any has been had,⁹² for, as discussed supra § 142, there is a distinction between quashing the writ and setting aside the levy, return and sale had thereunder. Nevertheless, it has been held, at least in terms, that an execution may be quashed after its return,⁹³ especially if it still has virtue as the basis for further proceedings.⁹⁴

Continuance of a motion timely made to a time when the motion would not otherwise lie does not deprive the court of its jurisdiction in the matter.⁹⁵

e. Notice of Motion

A timely notice of motion setting forth the grounds of irregularity must ordinarily be served on the parties to be affected.

Notice of motion to quash a writ of execution must ordinarily be given to the parties to be affected, statutes sometimes so requiring.⁹⁶ Want of notice, however, is waived by an appearance and resistance of the motion.⁹⁷

The grounds of irregularity relied on must be stated in the notice,⁹⁸ and it is not sufficient if stated in the moving affidavits alone.⁹⁹

It is no objection that the notice of motion is signed by attorneys other than those who appeared in the original action and that there has been no order of substitution, since the motion to recall an execution is an original proceeding.¹

On whom served. The notice of motion must be served on the real parties in interest, not on their attorneys.³ The sheriff, not being a necessary party, as has been noted in subdivision c of this section, need not be served.⁸

f. Form and Sufficiency of Application

The motion to quash the writ, even though in form of a complaint or petition, must be entitled in the original cause and set forth the grounds relied on for relief.

The motion to quash the writ may be made in the shape of a complaint or petition,⁴ but it should be entitled in the original cause.⁵

It must set forth the grounds relied on for the quashal of the writ,⁶ although not necessarily with the strictness of a bill in equity,⁷ and should allege facts as distinguished from conclusions of law.⁸

In some jurisdictions a copy or an accurate description of the execution must accompany the petition or application,⁹ but in others this is unnecessary.¹⁰

In some jurisdictions the motion may be made ore tenus in term time without any preceding petition for a supersedeas in the same court.¹¹ Although, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, a petition for supersedeas may be treated as a motion to quash, plaintiff is not confined to the grounds therein disclosed.¹²

Verification. An ordinary motion to quash made in open court in term time need not be verified.¹³ Statutes, however, sometimes require a petition to a judge in vacation or during the recess of the court to be verified.¹⁴ Any requirement of verification is waived by a failure to object before the final hearing.¹⁵

g. Evidence

The burden is on the moving party to establish the grounds for quashing the writ, competent, relevant, and material evidence, both oral and written, being admissible. In some jurisdictions the evidence is required to be in affidavit form.

Ordinarily a motion to quash an execution is based on matters appearing on the face of the proceedings.¹⁶ However, a motion to quash an execution resting on facts outside the record in the case must be established by evidence on the hearing of the motion.¹⁷

In some jurisdictions the proper practice is for the court to require evidence in support to be in the form of affidavits, and it is proper to refuse to permit oral testimony.¹⁸ Generally, however, oral evidence is admissible,¹⁹ provided it is relevant and material,²⁰ as is competent relevant and material documentary evidence.²¹

Affidavits not controverted are assumed to be true,²² but moving affidavits may be aided by oral evidence.²³ The unsupported affidavit of defendant is sometimes insufficient.²⁴

The burden of proof is on defendant who moves to quash an execution on the ground that the judgment has been paid,²⁵ and the presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the execution.²⁶

Where a levy has been made and thereafter a second writ issued, the burden is on the execution creditor to show that the former levy was insufficient.²⁷

One moving to quash an execution as issued more than a year after rendition of judgment, without revivor, must show that the judgment was not recorded within a year, which would bring such issuance within the statutory exception.²⁸

Where it is shown by defendant that he has paid the judgment to plaintiff's attorney of record, it is then the duty of plaintiff to show a revocation of authority of the attorney to receive the money before it was paid to him and that defendant had notice of the revocation.²⁹

The sufficiency of the evidence is governed by the rules applicable in civil cases generally.³⁰

h. Trial or Hearing; Matters Considered

A motion to quash a writ of execution is ordinarily determinable by the court in the exercise of a sound discretion, although in particular cases it may and sometimes must direct an issue to the jury. The court usually considers on such motion only such matters as constitute valid grounds for quashing the writ and are properly raised.

Questions of fact arising on motion are tried by the court,³¹ the court having the right to consider the motion and decide it in a summary way³² without the intervention of a jury,³³ unless by consent,³⁴ and it will sometimes for its own satisfaction direct an issue.³⁵

In some jurisdictions a motion to quash the writ raising the question of ownership of the property levied on must be heard on the merits by a jury if either party so demands.³⁶ Both parties agreeing, however, the motion and such question may be heard by the court summarily.³⁷

Discretion of court. The quashal of an execution rests largely in the discretion of the court,³⁸ which will quash the writ when necessary to prevent injustice,³⁹ provided the case is plain and the equity of the party asking the interposition of the court is free from doubt or difficulty.⁴⁰

The motion is properly denied where a granting thereof would necessitate the exercise of equitable jurisdiction over the judgment and process of the court,⁴¹ or where the question at issue is involved in a pending action.⁴²

Matters considered. As a general rule only such matters as constitute a ground for quashing the writ, see supra § 143, and which are properly raised may be considered by the court,⁴³ the motion ordinarily challenging the validity of the judgment on the face of the record, the regularity of the issuance of the execution, the sufficiency of its form, and the regularity of the proceedings of the officer.⁴⁴ Thus matters rendering enforcement of the judgment inequitable may be considered,⁴⁵ and the court may examine previous proceedings subsequent to the judgment to ascertain whether there has been any irregularity in the orders of the court or in the action of the clerk.⁴⁶ However, questions which should properly be considered on an appeal can-discretion to issue execution after lapse of five years from entry of judgment, court has discretion to quash execution issued ex parte after lapse of such period.—Creditors' Adjustment Co. v. Newman, 197 P. 334, 185 Cal. 509.

not be presented on the motion.⁴⁷ In such a proceeding, when constituting a collateral attack on the judgment, the court will assume in support of the judgment that all issues necessary thereto were presented and tried without objection.⁴⁸ So on a motion to vacate an execution issued ex parte after lapse of the statutory period, defenses to the original action cannot be considered,⁴⁹ nor can matters or circumstances leading up to the judgment.⁵⁰

On a motion to quash a second execution, the validity of the first execution will not ordinarily be inquired into,⁵¹ nor will the alleged fraudulent character of a sale under a prior execution.⁵²

If the motion is made by the judgment debtor, the court should not be influenced by any considerations as to the rights of other creditors.⁵³

Equities will not be adjusted on such a motion.⁵⁴

If the motion is on the ground that the judgment has been released by the creditor, the court will investigate whether the judgment has been assigned, or whether the release was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation.⁵⁵

Property affected. Ownership or title to property will not ordinarily be inquired into or adjudicated on such a motion,⁵⁶ nor will the court ordinarily inquire whether the judgment is a lien on the property levied on,⁵⁷ or whether such property is subject to execution.⁵⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, the question of the ownership of the property levied on has been raised and considered on such motion,⁵⁹ such motion being considered the equivalent of a statutory claim, discussed infra §§ 169-195.

1. Order

The order may vacate the writ in part, and is not subject to collateral attack if the court had jurisdiction.

The writ may be vacated in part,⁶⁰ but the writ should not be set aside where the only proper relief is the setting aside of the levy in part.⁶¹

The term "irregular" in an order setting aside a writ for irregularity has been construed to mean "void."⁶²

The order cannot be collaterally attacked if the court had jurisdiction.⁶³

As res judicata. It has been held that where it is determined on a motion to quash that the execution is valid and binding on defendants, that question and others proper to be litigated at the time are henceforth res judicata.⁶⁴ Other cases hold that only the issues litigated on the motion are determined,⁶⁵ and that the ruling on a motion to quash is not res judicata on a bill to enjoin a sale under execution.⁶⁶ Notwithstanding the foregoing, the granting or refusing of a motion to quash does not necessarily prevent a subsequent renewal of the motion on the same or different grounds where jurisdiction over the subject matter remains in the same tribunal.⁶⁷

If the adjudication quashing an execution has been on an immaterial matter, the order is not res judicata on a subsequent motion for the issuance of an execution.⁶⁸ In a proceeding to vacate an execution issued ex parte by the court under statute after lapse of statutory period after entry of judgment, the order of vacation has been held res judicata as to the right to enforce the judgment in a subsequent proceeding to vacate an execution to enforce such judgment based on the same grounds.⁶⁹

j. Costs

Costs are usually discretionary although, as a rule, they are awarded to the successful party on the motion.

As a general rule, costs are allowed to the successful party on the motion,⁷⁰ but the allowance of costs is usually in the discretion of the court.⁷¹ Costs to abide the event may be awarded under proper circumstances.⁷²

§ 145. — Effect of Quashing

The quashing of the writ ordinarily vitiates the levy made thereunder but does not affect the validity of the judgment or the right to issue another execution thereon.

It has been held that, when the execution is quashed, all rights or proceedings based thereon fall therewith,⁷³ as, for example, the levy made pursuant to the execution,⁷⁴ and any title to the property vested in the sheriff by the levy,⁷⁵ or even the right to enforce the judgment against particular property.⁷⁶ However, the quashing or dismissal of the writ does not affect the judgment on which it was issued,⁷⁷ and the judgment creditor may obtain the issuance of another execution.⁷⁸ Under certain circumstances the quashing of the writ does not vitiate a sale of property made in pursuance of the execution.⁷⁹

A judgment quashing an execution after the supreme court had reversed the trial court's refusal to quash relates back to the original judgment, and its effect, so far as respects the parties to that judgment, is to vacate all process issued for its satisfaction.⁸⁰

The quashing of the execution destroys the lien created by a levy on personal property,⁸¹ but a lien on land acquired by a levy is not destroyed by bonds given in proceedings brought to quash the execution.⁸²

If the writ is quashed merely as to the excess in amount, it may be proceeded on for the balance.⁸³

A rule to quash the writ does not of itself suspend the execution of the writ.⁸⁴

The quashing of an alias, which issued contrary to a personal agreement between the parties, in favor of other creditors, does not avoid the lien of the first execution, in the absence of any mention of the first execution in the proceedings to quash.⁸⁵

If money has been taken from an agent of the execution debtor, and the writ is subsequently vacated, the debtor can recover such money from the execution creditor.⁸⁶

§ 146. Stay, Quashing, or Withdrawal at Instance of Creditor

An execution creditor may recall the writ at any time prior to the sale unless defendant would be injured thereby.

An execution creditor may recall a writ of execution at any time prior to a sale thereunder,⁸⁷ and may issue as many writs as he pleases, and stay them as long as he pleases, so long as there are no intervening writs.⁸⁸ However, a party cannot on his own motion quash his execution, if it is regular and if defendant would be injured,⁸⁹ some sufficient ground being required to warrant the interposition of the court.⁹⁰

Plaintiff may make the motion where the writ has been irregularly issued without his knowledge or consent.⁹¹ If the writ is issued unadvisedly it may be withdrawn before anything is done on it,⁹² and the creditor may stop the sale of property not subject to the execution.⁹³ However, a defective or irregular writ cannot be withdrawn after a sale.⁹⁴

A verbal order by the creditor to the officer to stay the writ has been held insufficient.⁹⁵

The taking of a note from the judgment debtor, as collateral, on purchasing a judgment after levy, has been held to raise no absolute presumption of an engagement for stay of execution.⁹⁶

Suing out execution on a replevy bond does not

estop the creditor from afterward having such bond quashed on motion.⁹⁷

After assignment. A judgment creditor who has assigned his rights to another may not ex parte arrest an execution issued in his name so as to effect the rights of the assignee.⁹⁸

Effect. The right to issue a second writ is not affected by a voluntary stay.⁹⁹

Staying the execution after levy does not discharge the debt.¹

An agreement between plaintiff and the debtor to suspend a levy is no bar to the enforcement of the execution.² An agreement for a stay for the principal of the judgment does not prevent execution issuing in behalf of the court officers for their costs.³

If the creditor, on motion, quashes an elegit, he may pursue any remedy which was before open to him.⁴

§ 147. Affidavit of Illegality

Relief against an execution illegally issued may, where the statute provides such remedy, be had by an affidavit of illegality.

23 C.J. p 583 note 1.

Relief against execution by way of affidavit of illegality is a purely statutory procedure.⁵ It is a substitute for the writ of audita querela.⁶

The remedy is limited to the relief expressly conferred by the statute, strictly construed.⁷ Under the statutes it applies only to executions and judgments issuing out of and returnable to the court,⁸ and has no application to executions issued ex parte by a ministerial officer,⁹ except as specially authorized.¹⁰

Who may be affiant. The remedy by affidavit of illegality lies only in favor of a defendant in execution¹¹ against whom the execution is proceeding; a codefendant whose goods have not been seized cannot make affidavit.¹² One not party to the action who claims title to the property levied on cannot proceed by affidavit of illegality.¹³ The affidavit may be filed by an attorney in fact,¹⁴ without exhibiting or attaching his written authority.¹⁵

Necessity of levy. An affidavit of illegality will not lie unless there has been a levy.¹⁶ A fortiori, an affidavit of illegality is not proper where an execution has not been issued.¹⁷ The proceeding will not lie where defendant's funds have been impounded by garnishment.¹⁸ When the statute so provides, the giving of a bond is a prerequisite to obtaining a stay.¹⁹ Under the particular statute, no bond may be required in the case of an affidavit interposed to a levy on realty,²⁰ and in the case of personalty it may be necessary only where possession of the property is sought to be retained by the debtor.²¹ In other words, the debtor may replevy the property levied on by giving bond and security for its forthcoming, but is not bound to do so.²² The bond must conform to the statute.²³ The obligation of the bond is to redeliver the property at the time and place of sale,²⁴ and the burden is on the surety to show why the identical property levied on is not delivered.²⁵ If the bond sued on is not a statutory bond but is a good common-law obligation to produce the property and to pay the eventual condemnation money, and defendant fails to produce the property on demand, the measure of damages is not the value of the property but is the amount of the judgment rendered in the illegality case.²⁶

Return of affidavit and bond. When an affidavit of illegality is filed on the levy of an execution, it is the duty of the levying officer to return the execution, affidavit and bond to the next term of the court from which the execution issued.²⁷

An affidavit of illegality may be withdrawn by the party interposing it, subject to the right of plaintiff to proceed as in claim cases where the claims are withdrawn.²⁸

§ 148. — Grounds

Defendant may proceed against an execution by affidavit of illegality only on such grounds as are authorized by statute. Under the statute an affidavit of illegality may be the proper procedure where the judgment is void or has become unenforceable.

An affidavit of illegality will lie only on the grounds provided for by the statute.²⁹ Under the statute, defendant may proceed by affidavit of illegality where an execution against property "shall issue illegally, or shall be proceeding illegally."³⁰ Unless the judgment is void, an affidavit of illegality is proper only if some fact or situation has arisen subsequent to the judgment which warrants a stay of the execution proceedings.³¹ Thus an affidavit of illegality is proper where the judgment has become unenforceable,³² as where the judgment has been satisfied or settled,³³ or has become dormant through failure to enforce it for a specified period of time.³⁴ It is not ground for an affidavit of illegality that the property levied on does not belong to defendant,³⁵ that the execution was issued in the interim between the time when the remittitur of the appellate court was filed in the lower court and the time when it became the judgment of the lower court,³⁶ or that a levy on property of a codefendant was dismissed by plaintiff without an order of court and the execution afterward levied on property of affiant,³⁷ although it has been held that an execution founded on an award against administrators in their representative capacity, but levied on the individual property of the administrator is ground.³⁸ It is not a ground that the execution debtor has an unliquidated demand against the execution creditor,³⁹ even though plaintiff is a nonresident and has no property in the state,⁴⁰ but it is ground that affiant has recovered a judgment against plaintiff in an amount as great as the sum for which plaintiff is levying execution.⁴¹ Such an affidavit is not a remedy for an excessive levy,⁴² refusal of the officer to levy on the property pointed out by defendant,⁴³ failure to give defendant an opportunity to point out property,⁴⁴ failure to give notice of levy to a tenant in possession,⁴⁵ disobedience of instructions to make the amount out of the principal first,⁴⁶ or for errors in the advertisement of property levied on.⁴⁷

Absence of affidavit as to taxes

Where a statute requires the judgment creditor to file an affidavit of payment of taxes, the want of such an affidavit is a good ground of illegality.—Wilson v. Ansley, 47 Ga. 278—Brown v. Gill, 44 Ga. 613—Connally v. Peck, 44 Ga. 430—23 C.J. p 548 note 73.

Discharge in bankruptcy

Defendant's discharge in bankruptcy is no ground of illegality in levy of execution on judgment for plaintiff in trover.—Barnes v. Moseley, 154 S.E. 388, 41 Ga.App. 713.

Pendency of motion to arrest judgment is not ground for affidavit of illegality.—Walker v. Tate, 170 S.E. 403, 47 Ga.App. 340.

Resort to equity is not necessary in order to establish illegality of an execution because of payment thereof.—Taylor v. Jordan, supra.

Transfer of judgment

When one of two joint defendants in a judgment pays off the judgment with funds belonging to both and takes a transfer of the judgment and the execution to himself and afterward transfers it to another, who levies on the property of codefendant, the latter by an affidavit of illegality may set up the payment of the judgment and execution.—Register v. Southern States Phosphate & Fertilizer Co., 122 S.E. 323, 157 Ga. 561, answers to certified questions conformed to 122 S.E. 652, 32 Ga.App. 86.

Partial payment

The amount admitted to be due must be paid in order to stay the execution.—Equitable Mortg. Co. v. Montfort, 49 S.E. 715, 121 Ga. 696—Levadas v. Beach, 46 S.E. 864, 119 Ga. 613—23 C.J. p 547 note 55.

23 C.J. p 547 note 65.

A levy on corporate stock without the statutory notice to defendant is insufficient and may be arrested on affidavit of illegality.⁴⁸

Variance. To be good as a ground of illegality, the variance between a fieri facias and the judgment on which it is founded must be material.⁴⁹

Breach of agreement. Defendant may resist an execution by successfully showing that he had a good defense to the suit, which he was induced to abandon because of an agreement with plaintiff, made on sufficient consideration, that the judgment to be rendered was to be discharged against him on his doing certain acts subsequent to the judgment, and that he had performed such acts conformably with his agreement.⁵⁰ Where land is conveyed to one who agrees in consideration therefor to pay off a judgment, instead of which he takes an assignment of the judgment and proceeds to enforce the same by levy and sale, the proper remedy is by an affidavit of illegality and not by injunction.⁵¹ So where the creditor agrees with a surety, on a sufficient consideration, to look to the principal alone, but issues an execution against the surety, it is ground for illegality.⁵² An unauthorized settlement agreement is not ground,⁵³ nor is a mere voluntary promise on the part of plaintiff that he would not enforce a judgment against defendant, and that it would not be necessary for defendant to file any defense.⁵⁴ Where defendant appeared at the trial and defended the case on the merits, he cannot urge illegality of the execution on the ground that plaintiff violated an agreement to dismiss the action before judgment.⁵⁵ It is not ground for an affidavit of illegality that in a former levy on different land under the same execution plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement by which the purchase price of the land at a sheriff's sale would be depressed and plaintiff would acquire title, either in himself or some other person designated by him, in full settlement of the debt.⁵⁶ On an affidavit of illegality to arrest a levy in favor of an administrator, on the ground that on a previous levy the administrator and plaintiff had agreed to depress bidding and that the indebtedness should be discharged, an alternative prayer for the cancellation of the fieri facias in lieu of cancellation of the deed of the prior sale is without equity where founded on the theory that the administrator has no interest in the property but that it has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser and there is no allegation that any benefit from the sale has accrued to the estate.⁵⁷

Dismissal of levy on property of principal. Inasmuch as plaintiff has the option of proceeding against the property of the principal or of the surety when the execution is against both, the dismissal of a levy on the lands of the principal is no ground for illegality on the part of the surety.⁵⁸

Attack on judgment. A defendant in execution, who has had his day in court, cannot ordinarily, by means of an affidavit of illegality, go behind the judgment on which the execution is based,⁵⁹ and set up defenses which he urged or might have

Remedy against officer

Judgment in trover, although rendered for money, is conclusive as to plaintiff's title to property, which cannot be inquired into by affidavit of illegality.—Barnes v. Moseley, 154 S.E. 388, 41 Ga.App. 713.

Default judgment

A defendant on whom service has been perfected and against whom judgment has been rendered, although he was in default and made no appearance by plea or answer, has had his "day in court" within Civ. Code 1910 § 5311.—Barnes v. West Pub. Co., 127 S.E. 668, 33 Ga.App. 626.

Unauthorized consent to judgment

Although an attorney consented to a judgment against his client in direct opposition to the client's instructions, the client cannot go behind the judgment by affidavit of illegality in view of Civ. Code 1910 § 5311, providing that if defendant has had his day in court he cannot go behind the judgment by such an affidavit.—Pat- urged at the trial.⁶⁰ An affidavit of illegality cannot be used to test the validity of the judgment unless the judgment is absolutely void,⁶¹ in that the court was without jurisdiction of the subject matter or defendant did not have his day in court.⁶² In such case defendant need not show a valid defense to the suit wherein the judgment was rendered.⁶³ The remedy by affidavit of illegality is not a substitute for certiorari⁶⁴ or other procedure for review;⁶⁵ and it cannot be used to correct errors in the proceedings prior to judgment,⁶⁶ or irregularities in the judgment.⁶⁷

Denial that judgment ought to have been rendered because of pre-existing facts is to go behind judgment.—Tuff v. Loh, 144 S.E. 670, 38 Ga.App. 526, followed in Tuff v. Continental Trust Co., 144 S.E. 671, 38 Ga.App. 529.

23 C.J. p 548 note 75.

Prematurity of suit

Judgment cannot be attacked by affidavit of illegality because suit was instituted prematurely.—Nix v. Baxter, 167 S.E. 115, 46 Ga.App. 153.

Lack of service on codefendant is a matter for defense, and is not ground for an affidavit of illegality.—Foster v. J. R. Watkins Co., 121 S. E. 861, 31 Ga.App. 609.

Premature seizure of property

There being an affidavit of illegality to a judgment rendered against affiant as surety on a bond given by defendant in a proceeding to foreclose a sawmill lien on lumber and it appearing that the defense set up by affiant was that plaintiff had taken possession of the lumber and converted it before judgment had been rendered on the bond, it was proper to dismiss the affidavit, since such defense could have been made by affiant before judgment.—Waters v. Scott, 121 S.E. 865, 31 Ga.App. 690.

Payment

Defendant in execution may not by affidavit of illegality make defense of payment of a debt, but may make only the defense of the payment of the execution itself.—Felker v. Johnson, 7 S.E.2d 668, 189 Ga. 797.

61. Ga.—City of Albany v. Parks, 5 S.E.2d 680, 61 Ga.App. 55—Walker v. Tate, 170 S.E. 403, 47 Ga.App. 340—Ivey v. Kerce, 156 S.E. 239, 42 Ga.App. 336—Tuff v. 23 C.J. p 548 note 78.

Even where judgment has been obtained by fraud, defendant's remedy is not by affidavit of illegality.—Tuff v. Loh, 144 S.E. 670, 38 Ga.App. 526, followed in Tuff v. Continental Trust Co., 144 S.E. 671, 38 Ga.App. 529.

Fraud depriving defendant of hearing

Defendant who has had his day in court and against whom a judgment has been rendered cannot go behind the judgment by an affidavit of illegality because he was by plaintiff's fraud, unmixed with negligence on his own part, deprived of a hearing. His proper remedy is by a petition in equity to set aside the judgment.—Nix v. Baxter, 167 S.E. 115, 46 Ga. App. 153—23 C.J. p 549 note 93.

Perjured evidence

Illegality attacking judgment on which fieri facias was issued on ground that it was obtained by perjured evidence was properly dismissed.—Swords v. Roach, 166 S.E. 185, 175 Ga. 774.

Joint judgment against defendant and garnishee being void as to garnishee, affidavit of illegality to execution thereon should be sustained.—Donaldson v. Tripod Paint Co., 158 S.E. 640, 43 Ga.App. 3.

Judgment against principal defendant vacated by bankruptcy

Surety may by affidavit of illegality attack judgment against him on garnishment dissolution bond by showing proceedings necessary to validate judgment became void when principal debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt.—Roberts v. Seanor, 166 S. E. 375, 46 Ga.App. 5.

Invalidity as to others

Decree vesting title in person represented, subject to execution, could not be attacked by affidavit of illegality, regardless of whether conclusive on others not represented.—Brown v. Bowman, 144 S.E. 353, 38 Ga.App. 507.

62. Ga.—Ivey v. Kerce, 156 S.E. 239, 42 Ga.App. 336—Brown v. Bowman, 144 S.E. 353, 38 Ga.App. 507—McConnell v. Mason, 116 S.E. 658, 30 Ga.App. 82.

Jurisdiction if defendant resided in district

(1) Where, if defendant resided in the district, the court would have jurisdiction of the subject matter and the return of process asserts residence in the district, the judgment cannot be attacked by affidavit of illegality.—Sanford v. Bates, 25 S. E. 35, 99 Ga. 145—Hartsfield v. Morris, 15 S.E. 363, 89 Ga. 254—Jackson v. Hitchcock, 48 Ga. 491.

(2) Judgment against nonresident defendants by default is subject to attack by affidavit of illegality, notwithstanding service, where resident defendant was held not liable.—Rhodes v. Southern Flour & Grain Co., 163 S.E. 237, 45 Ga.App. 13.

Void as to surety

The principal debtor cannot attack the judgment on the ground that it is void as to sureties.—Levadas v. Beach, 46 S.E. 864, 119 Ga. 613.

Change of plaintiff without notice to defendant

Affidavit of illegality alleging that, in suit on note, wherein affiant, maker, and plaintiff in execution, payee and indorser, were codefendants, plaintiff in execution against whom defendant had a defense, was made party plaintiff, without notice to defendant, and obtained judgment in question, was held not dismissible, since it showed affiant had not had his day in court.—Courson v. Disqualification of juror

Objection to validity of verdict on ground that juror rendering it was disqualified is not available by affidavit of illegality.—Owen v. Federal Land Bank of Columbia, 140 S. E. 425, 37 Ga.App. 394—Fairburn Supply Co. v. Crumley-Sharp Hardware Co., 124 S.E. 67, 32 Ga.App. 520.

23 C.J. p 548 note 76.

A levy on corporate stock without the statutory notice to defendant is insufficient and may be arrested on affidavit of illegality.⁴⁸

Variance. To be good as a ground of illegality, the variance between a fieri facias and the judgment on which it is founded must be material.⁴⁹

Breach of agreement. Defendant may resist an execution by successfully showing that he had a good defense to the suit, which he was induced to abandon because of an agreement with plaintiff, made on sufficient consideration, that the judgment to be rendered was to be discharged against him on his doing certain acts subsequent to the judgment, and that he had performed such acts conformably with his agreement.⁵⁰ Where land is conveyed to one who agrees in consideration therefor to pay off a judgment, instead of which he takes an assignment of the judgment and proceeds to enforce the same by levy and sale, the proper remedy is by an affidavit of illegality and not by injunction.⁵¹ So where the creditor agrees with a surety, on a sufficient consideration, to look to the principal alone, but issues an execution against the surety, it is ground for illegality.⁵² An unauthorized settlement agreement is not ground,⁵³ nor is a mere voluntary promise on the part of plaintiff that he would not enforce a judgment against defendant, and that it would not be necessary for defendant to file any defense.⁵⁴ Where defendant appeared at the trial and defended the case on the merits, he cannot urge illegality of the execution on the ground that plaintiff violated an agreement

to dismiss the action before judgment.⁵⁵ It is not ground for an affidavit of illegality that in a former levy on different land under the same execution plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement by which the purchase price of the land at a sheriff's sale would be depressed and plaintiff would acquire title, either in himself or some other person designated by him, in full settlement of the debt.⁵⁶ On an affidavit of illegality to arrest a levy in favor of an administrator, on the ground that on a previous levy the administrator and plaintiff had agreed to depress bidding and that the indebtedness should be discharged, an alternative prayer for the cancellation of the fieri facias in lieu of cancellation of the deed of the prior sale is without equity where founded on the theory that the administrator has no interest in the property but that it has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser and there is no allegation that any benefit from the sale has accrued to the estate.⁵⁷

Dismissal of levy on property of principal. Inasmuch as plaintiff has the option of proceeding against the property of the principal or of the surety when the execution is against both, the dismissal of a levy on the lands of the principal is no ground for illegality on the part of the surety.⁵⁸

Attack on judgment. A defendant in execution, who has had his day in court, cannot ordinarily, by means of an affidavit of illegality, go behind the judgment on which the execution is based,⁵⁹ and set up defenses which he urged or might have

Judgment in trover, although rendered for money, is conclusive as to plaintiff's title to property, which cannot be inquired into by affidavit of illegality.—Barnes v. Moseley, 154 S.E. 388, 41 Ga.App. 713.

Default judgment

A defendant on whom service has been perfected and against whom judgment has been rendered, although he was in default and made no appearance by plea or answer, has had his "day in court" within Civ. Code 1910 § 5311.—Barnes v. West Pub. Co., 127 S.E. 668, 33 Ga.App. 626.

Unauthorized consent to judgment

Although an attorney consented to a judgment against his client in direct opposition to the client's instructions, the client cannot go behind the judgment by affidavit of illegality in view of Civ. Code 1910 § 5311, providing that if defendant has had his day in court he cannot go behind the judgment by such an affidavit.—Pat-

urged at the trial.⁶⁰ An affidavit of illegality cannot be used to test the validity of the judgment unless the judgment is absolutely void,⁶¹ in that the court was without jurisdiction of the subject matter or defendant did not have his day in court.⁶² In such case defendant need not show a valid defense to the suit wherein the judgment was rendered.⁶³ The remedy by affidavit of illegality is not a substitute for certiorari⁶⁴ or other procedure for review;⁶⁵ and it cannot be used to correct errors in the proceedings prior to judgment,⁶⁶ or irregularities in the judgment.⁶⁷

23 C.J. p 548 note 75.

Prematurity of suit

Judgment cannot be attacked by affidavit of illegality because suit was instituted prematurely.—Nix v. Baxter, 167 S.E. 115, 46 Ga.App. 153.

Lack of service on codefendant is a matter for defense, and is not ground for an affidavit of illegality.—Foster v. J. R. Watkins Co., 121 S.E. 861, 31 Ga.App. 609.

Premature seizure of property

There being an affidavit of illegality to a judgment rendered against affiant as surety on a bond given by defendant in a proceeding to foreclose a sawmill lien on lumber and it appearing that the defense set up by affiant was that plaintiff had taken possession of the lumber and converted it before judgment had been rendered on the bond, it was proper to dismiss the affidavit, since such defense could have been made by affiant before judgment.—Waters v. Scott, 121 S.E. 865, 31 Ga.App. 690.

Payment

Defendant in execution may not by affidavit of illegality make defense of payment of a debt, but may make only the defense of the payment of the execution itself.—Felker v. Johnson, 7 S.E.2d 668, 189 Ga. 797.

23 C.J. p 548 note 78.

Even where judgment has been obtained by fraud, defendant's remedy is not by affidavit of illegality.—Tuff v. Loh, 144 S.E. 670, 38 Ga.App. 526, followed in Tuff v. Continental Trust Co., 144 S.E. 671, 38 Ga.App. 529.

Fraud depriving defendant of hearing

Defendant who has had his day in court and against whom a judgment has been rendered cannot go behind the judgment by an affidavit of illegality because he was by plaintiff's fraud, unmixed with negligence on his own part, deprived of a hearing. His proper remedy is by a petition in equity to set aside the judgment.—Nix v. Baxter, 167 S.E. 115, 46 Ga.App. 153—23 C.J. p 549 note 93.

Perjured evidence

Illegality attacking judgment on which fieri facias was issued on ground that it was obtained by perjured evidence was properly dismissed.—Swords v. Roach, 166 S.E. 185, 175 Ga. 774.

Joint judgment against defendant and garnishee being void as to garnishee, affidavit of illegality to execution thereon should be sustained.—Donaldson v. Tripod Paint Co., 158 S.E. 640, 43 Ga.App. 3.

Judgment against principal defendant vacated by bankruptcy

Surety may by affidavit of illegality attack judgment against him on garnishment dissolution bond by showing proceedings necessary to validate judgment became void when principal debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt.—Roberts v. Seanor, 166 S.E. 375, 46 Ga.App. 5.

Invalidity as to others

Decree vesting title in person represented, subject to execution, could not be attacked by affidavit of illegality, regardless of whether conclusive on others not represented.—Brown v. Bowman, 144 S.E. 353, 38 Ga.App. 507.

Jurisdiction if defendant resided in district

(1) Where, if defendant resided in the district, the court would have jurisdiction of the subject matter and the return of process asserts residence in the district, the judgment cannot be attacked by affidavit of illegality.—Sanford v. Bates, 25 S.E. 35, 99 Ga. 145—Hartsfield v. Mor- ris, 15 S.E. 363, 89 Ga. 254—Jackson v. Hitchcock, 48 Ga. 491.

(2) Judgment against nonresident defendants by default is subject to attack by affidavit of illegality, notwithstanding service, where resident defendant was held not liable.—Rhodes v. Southern Flour & Grain Co., 163 S.E. 237, 45 Ga.App. 13.

Void as to surety

The principal debtor cannot attack the judgment on the ground that it is void as to sureties.—Levadas v. Beach, 46 S.E. 864, 119 Ga. 613.

Change of plaintiff without notice to defendant

Affidavit of illegality alleging that, in suit on note, wherein affiant, maker, and plaintiff in execution, payee and indorser, were codefendants, plaintiff in execution against whom defendant had a defense, was made party plaintiff, without notice to defendant, and obtained judgment in question, was held not dismissible, since it showed affiant had not had his day in court.—*Courson v. Disqualification of juror

Objection to validity of verdict on ground that juror rendering it was disqualified is not available by affidavit of illegality.—Owen v. Federal Land Bank of Columbia, 140 S.E. 425, 37 Ga.App. 394—Fairburn Supply Co. v. Crumley-Sharp Hardware Co., 124 S.E. 67, 32 Ga.App. 520.

23 C.J. p 548 note 76.

Service of process. An ordinary affidavit of illegality is sufficient to raise the question of service of the original process where there is no official return thereon;⁶⁸ but a return of service is conclusive on that question in the absence of a timely traverse, and in such case an affidavit of illegality denying service raises no issue.⁶⁹

§ 149. — Form and Requisites

The asserted grounds of illegality must be alleged clearly, distinctly, and positively.

The affidavit of illegality must be in the form and contain the allegations required by the statute.⁷⁰ The allegations of the affidavit must be construed most strongly against affiant.⁷¹ The venue of the affidavit must be that of the court issuing the execution.⁷² The grounds of illegality alleged must be sworn to,⁷³ and such facts must be stated positively and not on information and belief.⁷⁴ The grounds of illegality must be stated clearly and distinctly,⁷⁵ and the fact that the affidavit uses the exact language contained in the statute does not necessarily render it sufficiently full to withstand a special demurrer.⁷⁶ The affidavit should state facts and not mere conclusions of law.⁷⁷ An affidavit is insufficient where it asserts facts negating or rendering immaterial the claimed illegality.⁷⁸ The affidavit need not specifically allege that the property levied on belonged to defendant.⁷⁹ An affidavit which does not identify the premises levied on otherwise than by reference to the entry of levy where the premises are fully described is sufficient.⁸⁰ An affidavit that execution was levied on property set apart as a homestead to affiant's deceased husband is not demurrable for failing to state that the execution plaintiff had not made affidavit that his claim was within

It is not ground that judgment was not signed

Ga.—Pollard v. King, 62 Ga. 103—Foster v. J. R. Watkins Co., 121 S.E. 861, 31 Ga.App. 609.

Failure of judgment to separate principal and interest was not ground for illegality.—Walker v. Tate, 170 S.E. 403, 47 Ga.App. 340.

That amount awarded for costs is left blank in the judgment is not a defect that can be raised by affidavit of illegality.—Juhan v. Robertson, 152 S.E. 915, 41 Ga.App. 326.

Plea undisposed of

An affidavit of illegality is not the proper remedy to arrest execution and set aside the judgment, on the ground that at the time of its rendition by the court as being by default there was an issuable plea on file and undisposed of.—Taylor v. Holmes, 103 S.E. 687, 25 Ga.App. 422.

Defect in jurat

The jurat being no part of the affidavit, a general demurrer to the sufficiency of the affidavit will not reach a defect in the jurat, such as the failure to state the official title of the person who administered the oath.—Smith v. Walker, 18 S.E. 830, 93 Ga. 252.

74. Ga.—City of Macon v. Whittington, 154 S.E. 139, 170 Ga. 612. 23 C.J. p 550 note 18.

Cure of defect

Verifying affidavit of illegality to best of one's knowledge and belief is insufficient, but affidavit may be amended by verifying grounds positively.—City of Macon v. Whittington, supra.

75. Ga.—Felker v. Johnson, 7 S.E.2d 668, 189 Ga. 797—Davis v. Conley, 185 S.E. 526, 53 Ga.App. 259—Mobley v. Goodwyn, 146 S.E. 28, 39 Ga.App. 64, followed in 146 S.E. 31, 39 Ga.App. 70. 23 C.J. p 550 note 15.

If one of grounds of affidavit presents legal defense against the further progress of the execution a motion to dismiss the affidavit should be denied.—American Mortg. Co. v. Tennille, 13 S.E. 158, 87 Ga. 28, 12 L.R.A. 529.

Discharge in bankruptcy

Where the affidavit alleges that the judgment debt has been discharged in a court of bankruptcy, it is error to dismiss the affidavit because of failure to set forth or attach a copy or abstract of the record of the proceedings in that court; it is not necessary that the affidavit shall contain this, but it should be submitted as evidence on the trial.—Murphey v. Smith, 85 S.E. 791, 16 Ga.App. 472.

Date of judgment

Ground of affidavit of illegality, alleging execution showed judgment was rendered on Sunday, but not alleging judgment was in fact rendered on Sunday, was held without merit.—Flanigan v. Hutchins, 146 S.E. 500, 39 Ga.App. 220.

Allegation that specified persons were necessary parties and were not joined is insufficient as a mere conclusion; the affidavit should specify why the persons were necessary parties.—Georgia Creosoting Co. v. Moody, 154 S.E. 294, 41 Ga.App. 701, transferred, see 150 S.E. 153, 169 Ga. 322.

Facts not supporting general allegation of discharge

That surety's affidavit of illegality alleged discharge from all liability because plaintiffs in fieri facias had removed principal's property from the county, which only discharged the surety in part, did not make the affidavit subject to be stricken on general demurrer.—Dasher v. I. A. Brannen & Bro., 116 S.E. 206, 29 Ga.App. 253.

one of the exceptions to the Homestead Act.⁸¹ An allegation that there was no judgment or that the judgment on which the execution was issued was set aside on motion for a new trial is not demurrable.⁸² An affidavit alleging falsity of a constable's return that there was no personal property to be found must distinctly aver that defendant had personal property subject to execution at the time of the levy on the realty.⁸³ If the land levied on is misdescribed in the execution the affidavit should set out the misdescription.⁸⁴

Lack of jurisdiction. An affidavit which alleges lack of jurisdiction of the person must distinctly negative all grounds of jurisdiction and all methods of service.⁸⁵ It must also allege that the traverse of the return of service was made at the first term after notice thereof.⁸⁶ An affidavit which alleges that the judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace at a place in his district where he had no authority to sit is good, without alleging the place at which the justice ought to have held court.⁸⁷

Payment. An allegation to the effect that the amount for which the execution has been issued has been paid or otherwise satisfied must be clear and unequivocal.⁸⁸ Such an affidavit should set out the facts, showing when payment was made, and to whom and the manner in which the debt was paid.⁸⁹ An allegation that the execution has been fully paid off since the rendition of judgment is sufficient on general demurrer, although it is not alleged to whom payment was made;⁹⁰ but such an allegation is insufficient against a special demurrer.⁹¹ If part of the amount of the execution is admitted to be due, and it is not paid or tendered, such ground of affidavit is demurrable.⁹²

New affidavit. Defendant is bound at his peril to state all the grounds of illegality which may exist at the time of filing his affidavit; if he fails, he will not be allowed to file a second affidavit for the same causes,⁹³ unless it is affirmatively shown that the grounds on which it is based were not known to affiant at the time of filing the first affidavit,⁹⁴ and, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, could not have been known at such time;⁹⁵ and it is incumbent on affiant to allege how and wherein he has exercised diligence,⁹⁶ and otherwise to state fully and specifically the reasons why the grounds therein contained could not have been known to him at the time of filing the first affidavit.⁹⁷ The fact that the first affidavit was dismissed or withdrawn, without a trial of the issues raised or attempted to be raised by it, does not make an exception to the rule.⁹⁸ If, pending the issue on an

Part payment

Where an affidavit of illegality based on part payment does not in express terms allege the amount due and unpaid on the execution, it must nevertheless be regarded as sufficiently alleging such amount, the sum being computable mathematically by a comparison of the amounts appearing to be due on the execution with the amounts alleged in the affidavit as having been paid thereon.—Smith v. Tokio Marine Ins. Co., 121 S.E. 846, 31 Ga.App. 631.

Payment by check

Affidavit of illegality which failed to allege that check payable to plaintiff in fieri facias and delivered to its attorney and accepted by him was paid, or that acceptance as payment was authorized or ratified, was insufficient.—Fairburn Supply Co. v. affidavit of illegality, leave is granted to withdraw the execution to be levied on other property of defendant, he may make another affidavit when the levy is made and the property advertised for sale.⁹⁹ A prior affidavit by one defendant whose property was not seized will not bar a subsequent affidavit by a codefendant after his property has been levied on.¹

Amendment. The court may, by order, permit an amendment of an affidavit of illegality.² Such is the rule as to an amendment which does not add a new and independent ground of illegality, but which merely amplifies or amends a ground in the original affidavit,³ and such an amendment need not be sworn to.⁴ An affidavit cannot be amended by the addition of new and independent grounds, whether of fact or of law, which existed and were known or, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, might have been known at the time of the filing of the original affidavit;⁵ an amendment asserting new and independent grounds of illegality will be permitted only if defendant did not know of such grounds and he takes oath to such lack of knowledge.⁶ A counteraffidavit cannot be amended after its return into court so as to change the issue thereby presented.⁷ An amendment traversing the return of service may be permitted where affiant did not at time of filing the affidavit have notice of the existence of the return.⁸ Where the levying officer wrongfully continues with the sale despite the receipt by him of an affidavit of illegality, defendant cannot set up such fact by amendment and have the sale set aside since such relief is not available in a proceeding by affidavit of illegality.⁹ The denial of a motion to strike an amendment to an affidavit does not preclude the court from sustaining a general demurrer to the amended affidavit.¹⁰

Delivery to levying officer. Under the statute, the affidavit should be delivered to the levying officer and by him returned to the court, but the filing of the affidavit with the court by defendant is not such an irregularity as warrants a dismissal of the proceeding.¹¹ If the affidavit is insufficient to arrest the writ, the officer may refuse to receive it,¹² but he must be governed by an inspection of the paper and not inquire into the truth of its recitals.¹³ Where the levying officer accepts and returns into court an affidavit which admits any indebtedness due on the execution, it is presumed that the amount admitted as due has been paid, and if such is not the case, it must be urged by defense and not by demurrer.¹⁴

§ 150. — Hearing and Determination

Where the statute so provides, if issue is joined, the questions of fact raised by the affidavit of illegality will be submitted to a jury; if issue is not joined, the court will decide on the facts as they appear on the face of the affidavit.

While it has been held that the court may and should hear evidence where there is a motion made to set aside the affidavit and permit execution to proceed,¹⁵ under another statute it is held that, if the facts set up in the affidavit are not controverted, the illegality is to be determined by the court at the first term¹⁶ on the face of the record, from an inspection of the execution and affidavit of illegality.¹⁷ If there is no written joinder of issue, the facts stated in the affidavit of illegality must be taken as true,¹⁸ unless the debtor waives a joinder

of issue,¹⁹ as by introducing evidence to sustain the truth of the affidavit, without objecting to proceeding to trial before joinder of issue.²⁰ Issue can be joined only by a writing, unless an oral statement of joinder is not objected to.²¹ If issue is joined, the facts must be tried by a jury.²² The affidavit cannot be sustained on oral motion without the introduction of evidence where trial by jury has not been waived.²³ Where the affidavit alleges among other grounds of illegality that there was no jurisdiction over the person of defendant, it is not an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge but is good practice to direct a separate issue to be formed and first tried on that ground.²⁴

Although, strictly speaking, the writ and the affidavit of illegality are not pleadings,²⁵ they are treated as the pleadings in this proceeding.²⁶ The issues are those made by the affidavit,²⁷ and defendant cannot, by demurrer or motion to quash, raise issues and matters of defense which could have been included in the original affidavit of illegality, or could have been added to it by way of amendment.²⁸ The question of title to the property levied on is not involved in such proceeding and neither party can make it an issue.²⁹

Notice of the time and place of hearing need not be given to the party filing the affidavit.³⁰

Order of proceedings. When the case on trial is made by an affidavit of illegality, a motion by plaintiff in the fieri facias to dismiss the illegality takes precedence of a motion by defendant to quash the fieri facias.³¹

Evidence. All evidence relevant and material to the issues is admissible.³² The evidence must be confined to the grounds stated in the affidavit,³³ and the debtor may be estopped to contradict his affidavit.³⁴ In a proceeding on an amended affidavit, the original affidavit is admissible in evidence.³⁵ The execution is admissible,³⁶ but it need not be formally introduced since it is before the court as part of the pleadings.³⁷ The pleadings in the action in which the judgment was recovered must be introduced in evidence to be considered by the court.³⁸ Evidence as to the merits of the claim on which the judgment was entered is irrelevant.³⁹

Burden of proof. On the trial of an affidavit of illegality, the burden is on plaintiff in fieri facias to make a prima facie case by putting in evidence an execution, fair on its face, and a legal levy thereon.⁴⁰ When this is done, the burden is shifted from plaintiff to defendant to support his allegation of the illegality of the execution or levy,⁴¹ and such proof shifts the burden back to plaintiff again.⁴²

If defendant in fieri facias assumes burden, he must prove essential allegations in affidavit.—Felker v. Still, 133 S.E. 519, 35 Ga.App. 236.

Affirmative defenses

Where an affidavit of illegality contains allegations of fact in the nature of affirmative defenses, on issue joined, the burden of establishing them rests on affiant.—Thompson v. Fain, 77 S.E. 166, 139 Ga. 310—Hill v. City of Calhoun, 171 S.E. 459, 47 Ga.App. 753—Herrington v. Moore, 165 S.E. 867, 45 Ga.App. 636.

Want of service

Burden was upon defendant, in proceedings wherein defendant filed an affidavit of illegality to the levy on defendant's personality of an execution, to show not only that defendant was not served with petition and process in action in which judgment upon which execution was issued was rendered, but that defendant traversed the sheriff's entry of service at the first term of court after notice to defendant of entry and before pleading to merits.
Ga.—Benton v. Maddox, 16 S.E.2d 141, 65 Ga.App. 540.

42. Ga.—McLeod v. Bird, 80 S.E. 207, 14 Ga.App. 77.

Taking issue from jury. Where the evidence is in conflict, the matter should be submitted to the jury;⁴³ but, where the evidence is such that the jury could not properly reach any other verdict, a verdict may be directed.⁴⁴ If the uncontradicted evidence shows that one of defendants had been duly served and the other had not, it is proper to direct a verdict that the writ proceed only as to the party served.⁴⁵ When no evidence in support of an affidavit of illegality is admitted, there should be no submission of the case to the jury, but the illegality should be dismissed or sustained as matter of law.⁴⁶

Weight and sufficiency. The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence required to support a verdict or finding have been applied to affidavit of illegality proceedings.⁴⁷

Determination. An order dismissing the affidavit may be made in a proper case.⁴⁸ The affidavit will be dismissed where the illegality urged is one that cannot be raised by affidavit of illegality,⁴⁹ or where defendant fails to appear at, or refuses to proceed with, the trial.⁵⁰ Where no evidence is introduced in support of certain grounds of alleged illegality, these grounds should not be treated as abandoned, but should be overruled.⁵¹ The court may quash the execution in addition to sustaining the affidavit.⁵²

Effect of determination. The questions determined, as well as those which should have been litigated, in a proceeding on an affidavit of illegality are, as to the parties and their privies, henceforth res judicata.⁵³ It follows that such questions cannot be later raised on a subsequent proceeding by affidavit of illegality,⁵⁴ on a motion to set aside the execution,⁵⁵ or in defense to an action on the bond given on the filing of the affidavit.⁵⁶ So a judgment that the writ had not been paid is a bar to a motion that it be entered satisfied,⁵⁷ or to an injunction against the execution.⁵⁸ If the debtor acquiesces in a judgment on the merits instead of a judgment of dismissal, on his failure to appear it is conclusive as to him.⁵⁹ However, the dismissal of the affidavit of illegality is not an adjudication of the merits of the issue therein tendered.⁶⁰ A judgment sustaining a demurrer to an affidavit for insufficiency is no bar to a new proceeding containing allegations stating a good case.⁶¹ A judgment overruling a demurrer and sustaining the affidavit except as to a certain sum will bar a subsequent application to amend the demurrer by introducing new and distinct grounds.⁶² A motion to set aside an affidavit of illegality which sets up that what purported to be a judgment was entered without authority involves the legal sufficiency of that judgment, and a denial of the motion is a decision that the judgment is void.⁶³

Proof of service lost

(1) In proceeding to enforce judgment by issuance of execution where record of proceedings in which judgment was rendered has been lost, and it cannot be determined whether court rendering judgment had before it evidence of service, person attacking judgment by affidavit of illegality makes out prima facie case by showing that he was never served, and it is unnecessary to show that no entry of service was made by officer of court.—Maddox v. Benton, 199 S.E. 563, 58 Ga.App. 746.

(2) If plaintiff replies by introducing evidence authorizing a finding that an entry of service was made, defendant would then be required to traverse that entry and make the officer a party, or plaintiff might overcome defendant's prima facie case by showing that there was a valid entry of service and that defendant had notice thereof at or before preceding term of court, or by showing that defendant had been actually served.—Maddox v. Benton, supra. 23 C.J. p 553 note 78 [a].

Where an affidavit is dismissed, the case is out of court and no further proceeding can be had therein in the absence of some procedure to bring the parties before the court.⁶⁴

Costs and damages. The costs are ordinarily in the discretion of the court.⁶⁵ Where it is so provided by statute, if it is made to appear on trial of an issue formed on an affidavit of illegality that the interposition was only for delay, the jury trying the case may assess on the principal debt such damages, not exceeding twenty-five per cent, as may seem reasonable and just.⁶⁶

§ 151. Injunction

a. In general

b. Existence of, or resort to, other remedy; adequacy of remedy at law

a. In General

An execution sale may be enjoined, the matter ordinarily resting in the court's discretion. An injunction restraining a levy or sale under execution may be waived or abandoned.

Under certain circumstances an injunction may issue to restrain a sale under execution.⁶⁷ Whether an injunction will be granted is often a matter of discretion with the court,⁶⁸ which should be exercised with caution,⁶⁹ but under certain statutes an injunction issues of right against a writ of seizure.⁷⁰

Waiver or abandonment of injunction. A complainant who has obtained an injunction may waive or abandon it.⁷¹

b. Existence of, or Resort to, Other Remedy; Adequacy of Remedy at Law

Injunctive relief against a levy or sale under execution ordinarily will not be granted where there is an adequate remedy at law.

The rule that an injunction will not be granted where the remedy at law for the injury complained of is full, adequate and complete, discussed in the C.J.S. title Injunctions § 25, also 32 C.J. p 57 note 34, is generally applied to suits for an injunction against a levy or sale under an execution; if there is an adequate remedy at law an injunction will not be granted,⁷² while if there is not an adequate remedy at law an injunction will ordinarily be granted.⁷³ If the remedy at law is doubtful and obscure, an injunction will be granted.⁷⁴

In applying the foregoing rules it has been held that if defendant can obtain a satisfactory remedy by a simple motion to the court which issued the execution it would be absurd to go into equity to obtain relief; equity will not listen to such a case.⁷⁵ Likewise, where a claimant is entitled to attack the judgment or execution, see infra § 173, equity will not enjoin the execution at the suit of the claimant and defendant in execution.⁷⁶ Injunction will not lie where the remedy is by appeal⁷⁷ or supersedeas,⁷⁸ or where defendant may have relief by affidavit of illegality,⁷⁹ interpleader,⁸⁰ by trespass to try title,⁸¹ or by the statutory remedy of trial of the right of property.⁸² Further, an injunction will not be granted because of matters which complainant should have asserted as defenses in the action in which the judgment was rendered.⁸³

On the other hand, an injunction has been considered an appropriate remedy where the writ has been issued beyond the territorial limits of the court's jurisdiction,⁸⁴ or where the situation presents several complicated questions of law and fact.⁸⁵ Similarly an injunction will be granted against an execution on a supersedeas bond where the sureties claim a discharge by reason of a release of property from an attachment lien pending appeal, such fact not being proper for presentation in the record on appeal because transpiring subsequent to the record and pending disposition of the appeal.⁸⁶ There is also authority that where a complainant has exhausted his remedy at law by way of an affidavit of illegality,⁸⁷ or where such remedy is not available,⁸⁸ an injunction will issue.

Where relief at law denied. The rule under which a court of equity declines to interfere until after the application for relief has been made to the court in which the judgment was rendered has no application when relief has been sought and denied in that court; the denial of that court to grant relief gives to the court of equity the same authority to interfere as though the other court were powerless to render aid.⁸⁹

Independent ground for relief in equity. Where there is independent equitable ground such as fraud, accident, or mistake, equity has jurisdiction regardless of a remedy at law.⁹⁰ However, mistake is not ground where coupled with negligence of complainant or his attorney.⁹¹ Where independent eq-

a. In General

An injunction restraining a levy or sale under execution will be granted in aid of justice, or to prevent injustice or vexation or the circumvention of the law.

Equity will grant an injunction to prevent a party making use of a legal writ of execution for the purposes of vexation and injustice,² and in some cases an injunction has been granted merely in aid of justice.³ Conversely, equity will not grant an injunction where to do so would be unjust.⁴ The use of an execution as a subterfuge to circumvent the law may be enjoined.⁵

b. Prevention of Cloud on Title Generally

Equity may, in its discretion, enjoin a levy or sale under execution to prevent a cloud on title.

Whether by reason of statute,⁶ or independently thereof, in order to prevent a cloud upon the title, equity may enjoin a levy or sale of lands under execution.⁷ This jurisdiction is coextensive with its jurisdiction to set aside and order to be canceled a deed of the property,⁸ and it is not necessary for the legal owner to wait until such cloud has been cast before calling on a court of equity for relief.⁹ A levy or sale under execution will be enjoined as a cloud on title where the property is not subject to execution.¹⁰

Although there is contrary authority,¹¹ as a general rule a sale of real property under an execution void on its face would not cast a cloud on the title and therefore a court of equity will not interfere to enjoin the sale;¹² and where the cloud to be cast on the title exists only on the supposition of an incorrect legal view being taken of facts which are patent to all, an injunction will not issue.¹³ To justify injunctive relief in behalf of a record owner in possession, the title, lien, or claim alleged to cast a cloud on the title must be one apparently valid on the face of the record, requiring resort to extrinsic evidence to establish its invalidity.¹⁴

5. Ga.—Fears v. State, 29 S.E. 463, 102 Ga. 274.

Intoxicating liquors

(1) Where intoxicating liquors are deemed subject to levy and sale under execution, the mere fact that a local option law forbids the sale of intoxicating liquors is no reason for enjoining the execution sale.—Fears v. State, supra.

(2) However, if there is collusion between the judgment creditor and judgment debtor to evade the local option law, an injunction will be granted.—Fears v. State, supra. Intoxicating liquors as subject to levy and sale under execution see supra § 23.

6. In Missouri

(1) It was formerly held that sales under execution would not be enjoined on the ground they would pass no title and might cast a cloud on the title of the true owner.—Kuhn v. McNeil, 47 Mo. 389—Drake v. Jones, 27 Mo. 428.

(2) Subsequently it was held that, in view of Rev.St.1899 § 3649, injunction would be granted to restrain a sale under execution which would cast a cloud on plaintiff's title.—Neeley v. Independence Bank, 89 S.W. 907, 114 Mo.App. 467.

(3) The same was held under Rev. St.1909 § 2534.—Long v. Palisades Bank, App., 198 S.W. 1129—Payne v. Davless County Savings Ass'n, 105 S.W. 15, 126 Mo.App. 593.

(4) This rule is continued under Rev.St.1919 § 1969.—Marsala v. Gentry, App., 232 S.W. 1046.

(5) Moreover, without reference to statute, it has been held that when a sale under execution will cast a cloud on the title injunction will be granted.—Hunter Land & Development Co. v. Jackson, 243 S.W. 436, 210 Mo.App. 548.

(6) Likewise, without reference to statute, it has been held that when execution is levied on land the legal title to which is held by a trustee for the use of a religious association, which equitable title is not a matter of record, the sale will be enjoined as a cloud on the title.—South Presbyterian Church v. Hintze, 5 Mo.App. 578, affirmed 72 Mo. 363.

In North Carolina

(1) Formerly a levy or sale under execution could not be enjoined as a cloud on the title, a judgment lien not being an "estate" or "interest" within the meaning of L.1893 c 6.—McLean v. Shaw, 34 S.E. 634, 125 N.C. 491.

(2) However, under the amendment of Pub.L.1903 c 763, it was held that an injunction could be granted.—Crockett v. Bray, 66 S.E. 666, 151 N.C. 615.

(3) The same is true under more recent statutes.—Mizell v. Bazemore, 139 S.E. 453, 194 N.C. 324—Harris v. Carolina Distributing Co., 89 S.E. 789, 172 N.C. 14, Ann.Cas.1918C 329.

In Texas

(1) Without reference to statute it has been held that, where a sale under execution would create a cloud upon the title, injunction lies.—San Barnado Townsite Co. v. Hocker, Civ. App., 176 S.W. 644—Ward v. Caples, Civ.App., 170 S.W. 816.

(2) However, the remedy of injunction in such case is conferred by statute.—Rose v. Wylie, Civ.App., 95 S.W.2d 523, error dismissed.

Summons in wrong name

A judgment against one in the wrong name, who was not served, is null and void, and an execution sale and sheriff's deed executed thereunder will not cast such a cloud on title as to authorize an injunction restraining a sale under execution.—Marsala v. Gentry, Mo.App., 232 S.W. 1046.

Discretion of court. The issuance of an injunction restraining a levy or sale under execution to prevent a cloud on title is ordinarily within the discretion of the court,¹⁵ and it will not exercise its jurisdiction to the injury of strangers.¹⁶

c. Errors or Irregularities Prior to Entry of Judgment

Errors or irregularities rendering the judgment voidable do not justify enjoining the execution sale.

It is not a ground for injunction to restrain an execution sale that the judgment is voidable because of errors preceding its entry,¹⁷ a suit to enjoin execution being a collateral attack on the judgment.¹⁸ Thus, where service of a writ of garnishment is irregular and a default judgment rendered, the irregularity of service does not constitute a ground for enjoining the sale under execution.¹⁹ However, an interlocutory injunction has been granted to restrain a sale under execution on a judgment including attorney's fees where it was admitted that statutory notice of such fees had not been given.²⁰

d. Irregularities in Writ or Proceedings Thereunder

- (1) In general
- (2) Delay in issuing execution
- (3) Execution for excessive sum
- (4) Issuance of writ contrary to agreement

(1) In General

Irregularities in the writ of execution or in proceedings thereunder may or may not constitute a ground for enjoining the levy or sale.

The decisions are not in agreement as to whether irregularities in the execution writ or in the proceedings thereunder constitute grounds for restraining a levy or sale under execution. In a number of instances injunctions have been granted be-

Particular errors

(1) An injunction against an execution under a judgment of an appellate court will not be granted because of lack of jurisdiction to render the judgment, based on the theory that the judgment appealed from was not final.—Ware v. Jones, Tex. Civ.App., 248 S.W. 429, affirmed, Com.App., 250 S.W. 663.

(2) A judgment that a ditch and its bed and banks were plaintiff's property is not subject to attack, in a suit to restrain execution, because it gave plaintiff fourteen feet of defendant's land as the necessary width of one bank to secure plaintiff in the reasonable enjoyment of its easement over defendant's land, although the complaint did not allege that plaintiff was the owner of any part thereof, the amount of land necessary for such purpose being for the court rendering the judgment, and any error in awarding more than was necessary being an error within jurisdiction which cannot be inquired into in such a suit.—Schultz v. Mexican Dam & Ditch Co., 224 P. 804, 47 Nev. 453.

(3) Error in awarding special damages under general allegations of damage is error, within the court's jurisdiction, which can be corrected only on new trial or appeal, and not in a suit to restrain execution of the judgment.—Schultz v. Mexican Dam & Ditch Co., supra.

(4) Where defendant not legally served with process made general appearance, remedy for erroneous decree is by appeal, and not collateral attack by suit to enjoin execution.—Hulsey v. Commercial Inv. Trust, 138 So. 766, 103 Fla. 609.

(5) However, it has been said that lack of service of summons and knowledge of suit may justify resort to equity to restrain execution.—Parker v. Berryman, 198 A. 708, 174 Md. 356.

(6) There is dictum that if the return of a sheriff showing service, is false, a remedy for the person purported to have been served is to enjoin execution on the judgment.—Board of Com'rs of Labette County v. Abbey, 100 P.2d 720, 151 Kan. 710.

(7) Where complainant sought an injunction to restrain levy of execution on the ground that he was tricked into coming into the county for the purpose of service of process, but this defense was not raised at the trial of the case, it was held that he had waived his right by failure to raise the question at the trial.—Sharp v. Kennedy, 13 Tenn.App. 170.

(8) That certain witnesses had testified falsely in order to obtain the judgment is not a ground for enjoining levy of execution.—Sharp v. Kennedy, supra.

(9) Error of a judge when not qualified for office in rendering a default judgment with a writ of inquiry in a suit on a written instrument, followed by rendition of final judgment after qualification, is a mere irregularity available by appeal or writ of error, and not by injunction to restrain the execution.—Stoudenmeier v. First Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 246 S.W. 761. Writ of inquiry see Damages § 171.

Knowledge of agent

Where service of a writ of garnishment is irregular because commanding the party's appearance before the court at a day of the term other than the first day of the ensuing term, such irregularity does not constitute a ground for enjoining the sale under execution where the agent served knows the requirement of the law.—Ellis v. Lamb-McAshan Co., supra.

cause of such irregularities,²¹ especially where an independent ground for equitable relief appears.²² Thus a sale without required indorsements,²³ or without notice of seizure,²⁴ or a sale of excessive interest,²⁵ has been enjoined. Likewise, a sale of an entire tract of land at one time instead of by separate parcels may be enjoined,²⁶ especially where it appears that the land will be sold at a sacrifice by that method.²⁷ An order of sale prior to a valid entry of judgment has been held a ground for injunction,²⁸ as has also the sale of property other than that described in the advertisement and notice.²⁹ Where two pieces of property are to be sold in a manner which would make the sale void and prevent competition, an injunction is proper.³⁰

On the other hand, it has been held that, where an execution is irregularly issued,³¹ or the writ is irregular in form,³² or no valid levy has been made,³³ or the writ is being executed in an irregular, oppressive, or fraudulent manner,³⁴ an injunction will not be granted, unless the remedy at law is inadequate,³⁵ since relief can be obtained by motion or otherwise out of the court which issued the writ,³⁶ or by appeal.³⁷ Thus a threatened sale without an appraisal as required by law,³⁸ or a levy on real property before a levy on per-

Irregularities in advertisement of sale

(1) Irregularities in advertisement of sale sufficient to avoid the sale to a purchaser with notice are sufficient to uphold an injunction to prevent removal or interference with property until validity of sale can be determined.—Triumph Ice Mach. Co. v. Sandersville Ice Co., 94 S.E. 570, 147 Ga. 468.

(2) Failure to advertise execution sale for the statutory time constitutes a ground for issuance of injunction against the sale.—Ziblich v. Rouseo, 103 So. 269, 157 La. 936.

Indorsement as to appraisal

Where a clerk of court is required to indorse on the execution whether the sale shall be with or without appraisal, the failure to make such indorsement is a ground for enjoining the sale.—Robinson v. Perry, 4 Tex. 273.

Tender of affidavit of illegality

Refusal to enjoin constable's sale because plaintiff had tendered affidavit of illegality was not error, where claimed payments were made prior to judgment and sale and the proceeds were used to pay execution costs.—Camp v. Shuman, 132 S.E. 74, 161 Ga. 895.

sonality,³⁹ or vice versa,⁴⁰ or an excessive seizure or levy,⁴¹ unless fraudulent or oppressive,⁴² or a mere irregularity in the notice of sale,⁴³ are not grounds for an injunction.

(2) Delay in Issuing Execution

In some jurisdictions the remedy is by motion in the original cause where execution is issued after the lapse of the time prescribed, but in other jurisdictions execution on a dormant judgment will be enjoined.

In some jurisdictions it is held that where execution is issued after the lapse of time provided by law for issuing it, the remedy is by motion in the original cause, and not by injunction,⁴⁴ and where the time limited for the enforcement of a judgment is fixed by statute, laches short of the statutory time is not ground for an injunction.⁴⁵ In other jurisdictions injunction has been held proper to restrain execution on a dormant judgment.⁴⁶

(3) Execution for Excessive Sum

Execution for an excessive sum is not a ground for an injunction, unless statutes otherwise provide.

Except where it is otherwise provided by statute,⁴⁷ or where execution is for the penalty of a bond,⁴⁸ injunction should not issue against an execution merely because issued for too large an amount, the remedy being a motion or application to court of issuance.⁴⁹ It follows that the fact that by mistake or omission credits were not entered on an execution is not ground for an injunction.⁵⁰

(4) Issuance of Writ Contrary to Agreement

In some jurisdictions a levy or sale under execution contrary to an agreement of the parties may be enjoined; in other jurisdictions an injunction will not be granted in such a case.

It has been held that a writ issued in violation of an agreement of the parties will not be enjoined.⁵¹ However, it has been also held that an

Delay due to proceedings by debtor

(1) Failure to have execution issued within the statutory time will not constitute a ground for enjoining its issuance, where the delay was due to judicial proceedings by the judgment debtor and execution is issued within the required time after termination of such proceedings.—Bridges v. Wilder, Tex.Civ.App., 72 S.W.2d 644.

Death of judgment debtor

Plaintiff is entitled to injunction restraining sale of land under a plu-ries writ of execution where judgment debtor, who was alive when judgment was recovered, had died before issuance of pluries execution and land sought to be sold thereunder had devolved on plaintiff and there had not been an administration on debtor's estate, the judgment not being dormant.—Grissom v. F. W. Heilmann Co., Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 1054, error refused.

Lack of consideration

Judgment creditor's promise to delay execution on part payment being without consideration, creditor cannot be enjoined from proceeding with execution.—Druid Hills v. Doughman, 156 S.E. 229, 171 Ga. 521.

Where no meeting of minds

Where parties agreed to settle defendant's action against complainants for personal services by defendant's taking judgment for fifteen thousand dollars, and withholding execution, but minds of parties never met as to whether payment should be in cash or stock, complainant could not restrain defendant from executing judgment and require him to accept stock in satisfaction thereof.—Girard Trust Co. v. Peacock, 169 A. 645, 115 N.J.Eq. 128.

Premature execution

Issuance of writ prior to the time specified by the parties is not a ground for injunction, particularly when the agreed time has arrived prior to the institution of the injunction suit.—Taylor v. American Trust & Savings Bank of El Paso, Tex.Civ. App., 265 S.W. 727.

injunction may properly issue in such a case,⁵² except where defendant would not be harmed,⁵³ or where the agreement for delay was made before judgment and might have been pleaded.⁵⁴

e. Irreparable Injury

A levy or sale under execution may be enjoined where it causes irreparable injury, such as loss of credit or commercial ruin.

Where the injury will be irreparable, an injunction may issue to restrain a levy or sale under execution.⁵⁵ Thus injunction lies where the remedy at law is inadequate because of the property having a peculiar value not capable of being fully compensated in damages.⁵⁶ This rule has been applied in the case of an execution against a mercantile business which will prevent the carrying on of the business and mean loss of credit and commercial ruin.⁵⁷

On the other hand, if no irreparable injury can result an injunction will not be granted,⁵⁸ especially where the property is personal property.⁵⁹

f. Property Not Subject to Execution

Property in the custody of the law generally will be protected by injunction from levy and sale if the legal remedy is inadequate.

There is some conflict of authority as to whether an injunction against a levy or sale under execution will lie where the property is not exempt by statute but is nevertheless such property as is not subject to execution. Generally property in the custody of the law will be protected by injunction from levy and sale,⁶⁰ if the remedy at law is deemed inadequate.⁶¹ Where the parties contract that certain property shall be exempt, injunction lies to restrain an execution sale of such property.⁶² Injunction also will be granted in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits,⁶³ or, as stated in subdivision b of this section, to prevent a cloud on title.

On the other hand, it has been held that the sale of land or an interest therein, which is not subject to execution, cannot be enjoined, since the remedy at law is adequate;⁶⁴ nor will injunction lie in behalf of the judgment debtor on the ground that the property levied on is an equitable estate and therefore not subject to execution, where the creditor claims the estate is a legal estate.⁶⁵ Where a personal judgment based on an indebtedness secured by a deed to realty need not be satisfied by a levy on the security before it can be enforced against other property of the debtor, equity will not enjoin a levy on other property until the security is exhausted, simply because it would be to the debtor's advantage and best interest that such

g. Property of Third Persons

- (1) In general
- (2) Real property
- (3) Personal property
- (4) Fraudulent conveyances
- (5) Compelling exhaustion of other property of debtor

(1) In General

Except where injunctive relief is authorized by statute, a third person whose property is seized under execution against a judgment debtor is not, in the absence of special circumstances, entitled to an injunction restraining the sale.

Unless otherwise provided by statute,⁶⁹ one whose property is levied on as the property of another is not, as a rule, entitled to an injunction to restrain a sale of the property under the execution, since he has an adequate remedy at law as by motion to have the levy discharged, by replevin or ejectment, by proceedings under statutes providing for the trial of the right of property,⁷⁰ or by statutory proceedings to establish the claim.⁷¹ However, where from the peculiar character of the property or the circumstances of the particular case the remedy at law is inadequate, an injunction against a sale may be granted at the instance of a stranger to the execution.⁷²

Whether an injunction will lie against a levy or sale under execution of the separate property of a married woman under a judgment against the husband is discussed in the C.J.S. title Husband and Wife § 458, also 30 C.J. p 1052 note 69-p 1053 note 83, and 23 C.J. p 567 note 99-p 568 note 6.

(2) Real Property

As a general rule, where the real estate of a third person is levied on as the property of the debtor, an injunction will not issue at the instance of such third person.

The general rule is that where the real estate of a third person is levied on as the property of the judgment debtor, the third person is not entitled to an injunction⁷³ for the reason that he has an adequate remedy at law,⁷⁴ although there are decisions which seem to warrant an injunction in such

Restraining levy on personalty until realty exhausted

Where personal judgments based on notes secured by deeds to land were obtained against plaintiff, and judgments were declared to be special liens on land, that plaintiff, as defendant in fieri facias, could not direct sheriff to levy on land because title thereto was in plaintiff did not give plaintiff ground for relief in equity by injunction to restrain judgment creditor from levying executions issued on judgments on plaintiff's personal property until land had been levied on and sold.—Shedden v. National Florence Crittenton Mission, supra.

68. What constitutes real property

Under L.1934 c 247, authorizing injunctions against execution sales of real estate pending the emergency declared therein, an execution against a reservation of the exclusive right to construct and operate specified utilities, contained in a dedication of real estate for streets and alleys, will be enjoined; such reserved right in the dedication is not personalty, but realty within the meaning of the statute.—Gwin v. Smith, 167 So. 62, 175 Miss. 442.

69. In Louisiana

The remedy of injunction provided by Code Pract. art 298 par. 7, authorizing an injunction against defendant when the sheriff, in the execution of a judgment, has seized property not belonging to defendant, and insists on selling the same, disregarding the opposition of him who alleges that he is the real owner, is not of a chancery nature, but simply a petition or motion, with notice to the sheriff.—Van Norden v. On the other hand, an injunction will lie where the remedy at law is deemed not adequate,⁷⁷ or there is no remedy at law,⁷⁸ or where an execution is being used to harass or annoy another,⁷⁹ or where there is some recognized ground for equitable relief,⁸⁰ or where the effect of a sale would be to cast a cloud on complainant's title;⁸¹ but an injunction should not be granted to prevent a cloud on title where there are serious doubts as to the title of complainant.⁸² Equity will protect an equitable interest in land, as otherwise complainant would be without remedy.⁸³ Where a claim to real estate is filed but is rejected by the officer levying execution and the property is sold, equity will restrain the officer from turning over possession to the purchaser and the purchaser from taking possession.⁸⁴

Cloud on title as ground for enjoining execution levy or sale see supra subdivision b of this section.

In Missouri

(1) Prior to the amendment in 1899 of what is contained in Rev.St.1939 § 1683, the rule was that where a person had complete and perfect record title to land equity would not enjoin a sale under execution issued against another person having no interest in the land, since the owner had an adequate remedy at law by defense against any action by the purchaser at the execution sale, so that there would be no cloud on title and title could be proved by the record title without the use of extrinsic evidence or parol evidence outside the record.—Kuhn v. McNeil, 47 Mo. 389—23 C.J. p 565 note 77 [b] (2). Dictum to same effect see Rookery Realty, Loan & Inv. Co. v. Johnson, 243 S.W. 123, 294 Mo. 461—Madden v. Fitzsimmons, App., 150 S.W.2d 761.

(2) However, it was further held that if the title was not perfect and complete, and the execution debtor had some apparent interest in the land so as to require the owner to prove title by extrinsic evidence, injunction could be had.—Rookery Realty, Loan & Inv. Co. v. Johnson, supra—Madden v. Fitzsimmons, supra.

(3) Following the amendment of 1899, it was held that the owner could enjoin an execution issued against a stranger from being levied on his lands, provided such a cloud on title existed as had formerly been required.—Long v. Palisades Bank, App., 198 S.W. 1129—23 C.J. p 565 note 77 [b] (1).

(4) Subsequent cases have removed this limitation.—Rookery Realty, Loan & Inv. Co. v. Johnson, supra—Madden v. Fitzsimmons, supra.

(5) Hence the Missouri rule may be summarized: A suit may be maintained to enjoin the sale of land by virtue of an execution on a judgment against one having no interest in the land subject to the execution at the time of sale, whether the defense of the title against the execution purchaser would depend on extrinsic evidence, or whether no title or apparent title would pass by virtue of the sale.—Macklind Inv. Co. v. Ferry, 108 S.W.2d 21, 341 Mo. 493—Madden v. Fitzsimmons, supra.

In Texas

(1) Formerly a sale of real estate under execution, issued against a third person, could not be enjoined by the owner of the property where the evidence of the superiority of his title was a matter of record.—Mann v. Wallis, 12 S.W. 1123, 75

Tex. 611—23 C.J. p 565 note 77 [c] (1).

(2) Complainant was deemed to have an adequate remedy at law.—Mann v. Wallis, supra—23 C.J. p 565 note 77 [c] (1).

(3) This rule, although followed, was criticized and deplored.—Chamberlain v. Baker, 67 S.W. 532, 28 Tex. Civ.App. 499.

(4) Where the evidence that would defeat the apparent claim being sold through the execution sale was not a matter of record, an injunction would lie for the reason that an innocent purchaser might thus acquire title and irreparable injury result.—Gardner v. Douglass, 64 Tex. 76—Barr v. Simpson, 117 S.W. 1041, 54 Tex.Civ.App. 105—23 C.J. p 565 note 77 [c] (2).

(5) Under subsequent statutes an owner of real property will be granted an injunction against a levy or sale under execution against another as a cloud upon the title, irrespective of any legal remedy at law.—Mostyn v. Griffith, Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 906, error dismissed, judgment correct—Pacheco v. Allala, Civ.App., 261 S.W. 148—Boykin v. Materiality of remedy at law

Under statute, the right to temporary injunction restraining sale under execution against party alleged to have no interest in land involved is not dependent on showing that peti-

lien.⁸⁶ In other jurisdictions the purchaser is left to his remedy at law,⁸⁷ except that equity will interpose where there are other grounds for its intervention.⁸⁸

Where purchasers claim under deeds from the judgment debtor, but defects in the deeds affirmatively appear so as to render them void as against creditors, an injunction will not lie.⁸⁹ An execution purchaser cannot restrain another creditor from selling the property under an alleged prior encumbrance.⁹⁰

(3) Personal Property

Except when compensation in damages cannot be had or there is no adequate remedy at law, or some equitable feature exists, a sale under execution of personal property of a person other than the judgment debtor will not be enjoined.

Ordinarily equity will not enjoin the sale of the personal property of complainant under an execution against another,⁹¹ unless such property has a special value, rendering compensation in damages impossible,⁹² or the consequential damages would result in great injustice,⁹³ or the claim of one party involves or depends on some equitable interest or feature.⁹⁴ Complainant should resort to the remedy given him at law by replevin,⁹⁵ or detinue,⁹⁶ or interpleader,⁹⁷ or sue the officer in trespass,⁹⁸ or proceed by affidavit and bond to try the right of property.⁹⁹

Where the remedy at law is not adequate an in-tioners had no adequate remedy at law.—Shirey v. Trust Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 69 S.W.2d 835, error refused.

Injunction pending declaratory judgment

Where equity has no jurisdiction to determine whether the title of a purchaser from the judgment debtor is superior to the lien of the judgment, and no remedy is provided at law for the determination of such question until after the lien of the judgment has been transformed into an absolute title, the purchasers should be permitted time to avail themselves of the remedy under the Declaratory Judgments Act, and, pending a determination in such proceeding, the execution sale will be enjoined.—Englese v. Hyde, 155 A. 373, 108 N.J.Eq. 403.

Injury to purchaser caused by judgment creditor

Where judgment debtor and judgment creditor, relatives, lived in the same household, and the judgment was docketed in a name differently spelled so that a transferee of the property had no knowledge of the existence of the judgment, such transferee is entitled to have the execution sale enjoined, it appearing that the judgment creditor knew of the error in name and that he instructed his attorney not to press execution.—*Stark v. junction can be obtained,¹ as, for instance, where the levy would mean loss of credit and commercial ruin.²

(4) Fraudulent Conveyances

A transferee under a fraudulent conveyance is not entitled to an injunction against a levy or sale under execution of the property transferred.

Where a judgment creditor may levy execution on the property fraudulently transferred by his debtor, as shown in the C.J.S. title Fraudulent Conveyances § 308, also 27 C.J. p 704 note 15-p 706 note 28, injunctive relief at the instance of the transferee will not be granted,³ and it has been so held although the levy and sale would constitute a cloud on the title.⁴ If the husband makes a fraudulent conveyance to his wife, injunction will not issue against execution levied on the property thus conveyed.⁵

(5) Compelling Exhaustion of Other Property of Debtor

In some jurisdictions the purchaser from a judgment debtor is entitled to an injunction to compel the creditor to resort to property still in the debtor's possession.

The doctrine of marshaling assets has been invoked in some jurisdictions in aid of the purchaser of a judgment debtor to compel the creditor to resort to the property still in the possession of the debtor before selling the land of the debtor's purchaser to satisfy the judgment; injunction may issue against the creditor who insists on proceeding first against the purchaser,⁶ although in some cases the injunction has been denied as improper.⁷ The doctrine will not be extended so far as to interfere with the creditor's rights under his lien, or impose unreasonable delay or litigation and expense in the enforcement of his remedies.⁸

(1) In General

An injunction against a levy or sale under execution ordinarily will not be granted to protect creditors.

Creditors ordinarily cannot obtain an injunction against a levy or sale under execution by the judgment creditor.⁹ A simple contract creditor should reduce his claim to a judgment to secure a standing in a court of equity to enjoin the disposition of his debtor's property under judgments alleged to have been obtained in fraud of his claim.¹⁰ An attaching creditor who has not yet reduced his claim to judgment stands in no better position.¹¹ Where a person has an interest in land which will not pass by an execution sale against another, such person cannot be injured by the sale and hence is not entitled to an injunction.¹²

(2) Lien Creditors

(a) In general

(b) Mortgagees or bondholders

(a) In General

Under certain circumstances equity may enjoin a sale under execution at the instance of lienors.

A senior lienor or encumbrancer has no occasion for an injunction, since the sale cannot affect his lien.¹³ Nevertheless injunction may be granted in such cases,¹⁴ as far as necessary to protect such prior rights.¹⁵ An injunction is proper pending proceedings to determine the priority of liens.¹⁶ Equity will not generally enjoin a senior encumbrancer at the instance of the junior,¹⁷ but the junior may restrain the sale on the ground that the senior lien has been paid,¹⁸ or that it was void.¹⁹

It is no ground for injunction that the complaining lienor is without means to bid at the sale,²⁰ or that claims to the property are pending which will cause the property to be sold at a reduced price.²¹

(b) Mortgagees or Bondholders

Equity generally will not enjoin an execution sale to protect mortgagees, although an injunction may be granted under certain circumstances.

Generally a mortgagee cannot obtain an injunction against the sale of the mortgaged property under execution,²² unless necessary to prevent the conversion or destruction of the property²³ or the impairment of his security,²⁴ or unless the writ is illegal,²⁵ or equity is the only forum having jurisdiction to determine his rights.²⁶ Injunction will not generally lie in favor of a mortgagee against an execution levied on land by the holder of a junior encumbrance, since the senior lien will not as a rule be impaired.²⁷ However, where the record does not disclose the priority of the mortgage, the mortgagee has a right to interfere and restrain an attempted sale of a full title and interest.²⁸ Where a senior mortgagee has agreed with the debtor to cancel a portion of the mortgage debt and to take an unsecured note for the balance in consideration of a deed of the land unencumbered, and he has advanced the money necessary to enable the debtor to secure a release of junior encumbrances, but by mistake the release discharged only a junior mortgage and not a judgment lien, he is entitled to have an execution sale under such judgment restrained, the mistake being one of excusable neglect and not such as changes the position of the execution creditor.²⁹

A purchaser of mortgaged property at a foreclosure sale cannot enjoin a sale of the mortgagor's remaining equity of redemption as ordered in another action to which he was not a party.³⁰ If through another who acts without authority, the mortgagee's rights are not evidenced in whole by title of record, execution may be enjoined to prevent a cloud on his title.³¹

The mortgagee who comes into equity to foreclose his lien may have injunction to prevent a sale of the property under executions and attachments at law, in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits and a cloud on the title.³² The trustee of a deed of trust of all the property of a company may enjoin the sheriff from seriously damaging the freehold by the removal of machinery from the premises in execution of a judgment, although the sheriff claims that the deed is fraudulent.³³

Assignee of mortgage. An assignee of a mortgage is not entitled to an injunction against a sale under execution, unless it appears that an injury would thereby result for which there is no full, complete, and adequate remedy at law.³⁴

Execution against quasi public property. Property of a railroad company³⁵ or other quasi-public corporation³⁶ may be protected from sale by injunction in favor of mortgagees or bondholders of the company, where their security would otherwise be affected. Thus, under a statute which makes all railroad property subject to a mortgage on it, injunction will be granted the bondholders of the road if execution is levied on a part of the property.³⁷

(3) Joint Property

An injunction may issue to restrain an execution sale of the interest of a joint owner under a judgment against his coöwner, but the court will not restrain a sale of the interest of the coöwner.

While a joint owner who is not a judgment debtor cannot have a sale under execution enjoined as to the interest of his coöwner against whom the judgment was rendered,³⁸ an injunction lies to restrain a sale of his own interest, as where such sale would cast a cloud on his title.³⁹ Where goods are intermingled after complainant purchases an interest in part of the goods, and he fails to point out his goods to the officer, the execution will not be enjoined.⁴⁰

Injunction has been issued to prevent the removal of the property that the debtor's share in it might first be determined,⁴¹ and to protect the equity of one coöwner when the execution was issued at the instance of another coöwner.⁴²

The availability of relief by injunction by one partner to restrain a levy or sale under execution against a copartner is considered in the C.J.S. title Partnership § 240, also 47 C.J. p 1019 notes 31-33.

(4) Trust Property

In a proper case an execution sale of trust property may be enjoined.

A sale of land held in trust under execution against the trustee would cloud the equitable title of a cestui que trust and will therefore be enjoined.⁴³ So an injunction is properly issued to protect infants' shares in real property held in trust.⁴⁴ An injunction also is proper where the sale would work irreparable injury to the title of the trustee.⁴⁵

However, where there is an adequate remedy at law, neither the trustee nor the cestui que trust can obtain an injunction against a sale of the property under execution.⁴⁶ The grantee of land subject to a trust who subsequently receives an interest in the land discharged of the trust cannot enjoin an execution against his interest in it.⁴⁷

1. Satisfaction of Debt; Tender of Payment

Ordinarily an injunction will not be granted because the judgment has been paid or satisfied, although in some cases injunctive relief has been decreed. The enforcement of an execution may be restrained where proper tender of the amount due has been made and the tender is kept good.

There is not entire harmony in the authorities on the question of the right to interpose by way of injunction to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment which has been fully paid.⁴⁸ In some cases
